7½ Million Is Army Goal With Draft of 18 Year Olds

Stimson, Marshall Tell of U. S. Need For Youth as Both Houses Speed Bills

By Edward Ryan
Post Staff Writer

America's high command told Congress yesterday that present plans to build a hard-hitting integrated Army of seven and a half million men by the end of next year have made it "imperative" immediately to lower the minimum draft age from 20 to 18 years.

Leaders of both Houses prepared to cut legislative corners to make the lower draft age law by next week, after hearing military leaders report that a high proportion of younger men will be needed to make up the three and a quarter million remaining to be called for military service by December 31, 1943.

In face of the House schedule to approve the age reduction by Saturday, Senate leaders swung into line with plans to complete their hearings today and seek a vote on the floor by Monday or Tuesday.

Only One Day Debate

Members on both sides of the Capitol predicted freely that each chamber would approve the legislation with a single day of debate, and send the legislation to the President before the end of next week. This pace was set by simultaneous hearings before the House and Senate Military Affairs Committees, both of which will continue and be completed today.

In disclosing the Army's 1943 expansion program, Secretary of War Stimson and Gen. George C. Marshall, chief of staff, said that there are already 4,250,000 in the Army, 3,250,000 less than the minimum requirements for next year, and that the Army will reach five million by the end of the this year.

On the question of who will be called to make up the Army increase, Maj. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey told the Senate committee that immediate approval of the lower draft age would permit induction of some of the teen-agers in December, and that from the men now 18 and 19, and those who will become 18 next year, the Army could expect to induct between 1,300,000 and 1,400,000.

Dependents to Be Discounted

General Hershey renewed his previous estimate that men with dependent wives and children would probably not be needed for induction until the last quarter of 1943, if the 18 and 19-year-olds are available. He warned, however, that the time would come when the questions of what a man is doing for the war would outweigh dependency as a reason for deferment.

Even if the draft age is lowered, General Hershey said that some married men without children would have to be called in November. Immediate lowering of the minimum, he said, would permit calling the teen-age men to carry most of the load in December and the succeeding two or three months. After that, the men with dependent wives but no children would again be in line for induction.

Testimony of military leaders for the lower draft age was in-

Sanders, Mills Losing Runoffs In Louisiana

Baton Rouge, La., Oct. 14 (AP).—Representative J. Y. Sanders, jr. of Baton Rouge was defeated for renomination in the Sixth District in yesterday's Democratic runoff primary, and the incomplete vote in the Fifth District today likewise indicated that Representative Newt Mills of Monroe had been defeated in his bid for a fourth term.

James H. Morrison, young Hammond attorney and one time candidate for Governor, pulled sharply ahead of Sanders today on receipt of belated returns from country precincts. The vote from 266 of 274 precincts in the Sixth District gave Morrison 28,583, Sanders 27,553.

Mills meanwhile was trailing Charles McKenzie in the Fifth District where 208 of 255 precincts gave McKenzie 12,284 votes, Mills 11,794. It may require the official count to determine this result, however.

In the Seventh District where Representative Vance Plauche retired after serving one term, Conservation Commissioner Joseph L. McHugh of Jennings had 15,450 votes to 14,721 for Henry D. Larcade, jr., in 180 of 243 precincts.

WLB Order Allows 5 Kinds Of Pay Raises

Individual Employes Can Receive Increases Within Certain Scope

The War Labor Board yesterday eased somewhat the ban on wage increases made without its approval by giving American employers blanket permission to grant five kinds of wage increases to individual employes within the scope of established pay systems.

The blanket authorization was granted on condition that the increases "shall not furnish a basis either to increase price ceilings of the commodity or service involved or to resist otherwise justifiable reductions in such price ceilings."

The five types of individual increases permitted are as follows:

Individual promotions or reclassifications.

Individual merit increases within established rate ranges.

Operation of an established plan of wage increases based upon length of service.

Increased productivity under piece-work or incentive plans.

Operation of apprentice or trainee system.

The action was companion to a previous WLB order which exempted all employers of eight or less workers from the provisions of the October 3 stabilization order which required the submission of all wage increases to WLB for approval.

Adjustments made under yesterday's order must be "incident to the application of the terms of an established wage agreement or to established wage-rate schedules covering the work asisgnments of employes," WLB said.

The order stated that "adjustments of wages made under this order should not result in any substantial increase of the level of costs."

A board spokesman stated that issuance of this order should serve

U. S. Begins Today to Buy Excess Tires

Owners Must Sell All Over 5 Before November 22

Uncle Sam is ready to purchase, starting today, all tires above the maximum of five to a passenger car permitted under the new mileage rationing program, Price Administrator Leon Henderson announced yesterday.

According to Henderson, the Railway Express Agency will be standing by to receive calls from tire owners who want to sell their excess tires to the Government. The Railway Express agent will leave a receipt for the tires and send the tires to a designated warehouse to be inspected and appraised by a Government tire expert.

Sale is Compulsory

The prices paid will be based on established ceiling prices. Damaged but repairable tires will be appraised at their ceiling prices, less cost of repairs. Purchase price will be paid either by check or in war bonds and stamps at the option of the seller.

Sale to the Government of all tires above five per vehicle by November 22 was made compulsory, by order of the Office of Price Administration, in order for Eastern motorists to continue using their gasoline rations. Motorists in the rest of the country, where rationing starts on November 22, will be denied rations until they get rid of excess tires.

Motorists in all parts of the country will have to declare how many tires they have before November 22. Falsification of the tire statement is an offense punishable by a fine of up to $10,000 and a maximum of 10 years in prison.

Meanwhile, Rubber Director William M. Jeffers left Washington last night for Akron to confer with officials of the rubber industry on an interim program to make available recapped tires while the Nation waits for the synthetic pro-

Doing It for Experience

British Sailors Spend Leave Helping on Virginia Farms

By the Associated Press

Portsmouth, Va., Oct. 14.—Lend-lease doesn't provide for it—but British sailors are helping Virginia farmers with their haying.

It began in a small way, but promises to get bigger. A yeoman aboard a British warship here for overhaul met a Norfolk County farmer "frightfully in need of hands." The yeoman told the ship's chaplain who told the ship's skipper who said, "Go ahead."

The skipper stipulated that his crew accept no pay. The farmers—resourceful chaps—get around this, however, by entertaining the sailors in their homes, treating them to beer, taking them to shows. One farmer plans to play host at a Virginia Beach hotel this weekend to his group of blue-jacketed helpers.

The ship's chaplain (he asks to remain anonymous) said, "We would like to place men on farms in other parts of Virginia. It's a grand way to spend their leave." (Easy, Hiram, the line forms on the right and you'll have to take your turn.)

Their experiences on the farms, the chaplain said, "are doing these boys a world of good. Many boys came aboard ship at 16 years of age. This is the first real leave some of them have had for almost two years. They hadn't been in a private home for almost two years. They need to get 50 or 100 miles away from salt water for a while."

Manpower Control Plan Given Trial

Voluntary Methods To Be Set Up in 2 States, 10 Cities Hit by Labor Dearth

By Ben W. Gilbert
Post Staff Writer

Voluntary methods of controlling manpower was placed "on trial" by the War Manpower Commission yesterday in a considerable portion of the United States as it designated 10 cities and two States as areas in which labor and housing problems have become serious.

Directors were designated for the areas with instructions to set up machinery for the handling of manpower on a voluntary basis. Keystone of the machinery in each area will be a management-labor policy committee which will work with the area director to develop plans for the full utliziation of all local labor.

Oregon, Washington Affected

The two States which will be treated as one unit are Oregon and Washington where activity in the shipyards and the northwest woods has created a full fledged labor supply problem.

The ten cities are Buffalo, N. Y.; Akron, Ohio; Louisville, Ky.; Mobile, Ala.; Oklahoma City, Okla., Portland, Oreg.; San Francisco, Calif.; Los Angeles, Calif.; Phoenix, Ariz., and St. Louis Mo.

"It became apparent several weeks ago," Manpower Chairman Paul V. McNutt stated, "that war production was being greatly hampered by the scramble for workers, particularly skilled workers regardless of where they were found or for whom they were working.

Foster Cooperation

"The area directors will be expected to foster cooperation by local management, labor and the public in bringing about the employment of the unused labor in their respective fields. This means that they will be expected to provide local men and women the opportunity for training, as well as the opportunity for employment, and that they will do their best to stimulate the hiring of women, physically handicapped persons, older workers and Negroes."

The action followed comments from President Roosevelt that the present voluntary system was not working satisfactorily and might have to be replaced by compulsory National Service Legislation.

Baltimore as Patterson

The manpower offices in the two States and the ten cities are expected to use as a pattern the experiences of Baltimore where a detailed manpower program has been worked out on a local basis since July.

Efforts will be made to secure area-wide agreements outlawing pirating of labor and to have all recruiting done through the United States employment service. If developed effectively, these steps would prevent unnecessary movement of men from job to job.

At the same time, efforts will be made to bring out all available labor in each area to avoid unnecessary importation of workers, thus complicating the housing problem.

Nazis Stopped As Russian Winter Nears

Soviet Hurls Back New Tank Attacks; Germans Appear Greatly Weakened

By Henry C. Cassidy
Associated Press Staff Writer

Moscow (Thursday), Oct. 15.—The Red army, fighting in the welcome chill of approaching winter, repulsed several more tank-supported German attacks in the Stalingrad and Caucasian areas yesterday without yielding ground.

For the second straight day the Soviet communique reported no significant change in the general situation. German shock troops apparently were in a state of temporary exhaustion or were holding back for replenishment or to switch to another theater.

Two companies of Nazis were reported killed, and five German guns, seven machine-gun positions, and three dugouts destroyed by one Soviet unit operating inside the ruined city, where the enemy's attacks have noticeably faltered within the last week.

Snow in Caucasus

Northwest of the city only "battles of local importance" occurred, with the Russians fending off an attack by two infantry companies which lost 100 men, the communique said. Nazi prisoners also were taken in this area, where one dispatch said the Red Army had dislodged the enemy from hilltops which had dominated Russian supply roads.

In the Moudok area of the central Caucasus, where a snowy mantle was descending, the Germans also were contained, the Russians said.

Several German tanks supporting an infantry regiment broke through to the Red army's defenses. "They were destroyed," the communique added tersely.

Along the Black Sea coast southeast of Novorossisk "our artillerymen destroyed two trains loaded with ammunition at a German-occupied railway station," the bulletin said.

Another Winter of War

Marine raiders, landed from the sea, destroyed a German cavalry force, blew up an ammunition dump, destroyed a radio station and captured staff documents in a populated place in this area.

(The German high command claimed that one German division operating between Maikop and Tuapse in the Black Sea coastal area had captured 100 fortified mountain strong points. The communique added: "In Stalingrad and on the Don front some counter-attacks and advances launched by the Soviets were repelled.")

Russian communiques, however, said no important changes took place on any front.

When and where the German army will strike again remains to be seen, but little more than a month is left before the second winter of war in Russia sets in.

Russian scouts were keeping a particularly sharp watch on the Stalingrad front for any signs of fresh enemy concentrations, despite the Germans' open inclinations toward static warfare.

'Nazis Won't Beat Russia'

Willkie Again Calls For Second Front

By Edward T. Folliard
Post Staff Writer

Wendell Willkie, back from his flight around a warring world, stood in the lobby of the White House Executive Offices last night and repeated his call for an early "second front" in Europe.

Defending his remark in Moscow that perhaps the Allied high command needed "prodding" by the public, Willkie said that, in his conception of democracy, military leaders were no more sacrosanct than civilian leaders. Therefore, he said, he thought public opinion ought to be applied to them as well as to statesmen.

There was no note of desperation in Willkie's second-front talk. He predicted that Hitler would fail in Russia and he said flatly that an Allied victory over the Axis was "sure."

"In my judgment," he said, "Germany will never conquer Russia."

The shaggy Hoosier, 1940 Republican nominee for President, talked to President Roosevelt for an hour and a half. When he left, he had Mr. Roosevelt's assurances that any reports he had heard about White House criticism of him while abroad were "entirely wrong."

He had landed at the Washington National Airport at 4 p. m. in the same Army plane that took him around the world—a four-motored Liberator dubbed "Gulliver." The name of Jonathan Swift's far-travelling hero was printed on the plane in three languages—English, Chinese and Russian.

Willkie looked somewhat gaunt and weary after his 31,000-mile journey to 17 countries. He said he had lost about 10 or 15 pounds, but insisted that he was feeling "tops."

"I'm damn glad to get back," he said, as he jumped from the plane.

When he came out of the President's office at 6:40, newspapermen swarmed around him. He halted in the lobby, leaned against the Aguinaldo mahogany table and held forth for a half hour.

He was asked whether President Roosevelt had expressed satisfaction with his report. He said that was for the President to say.

"He did say specifically," Willkie added, "that any report that he had criticized me while I was abroad was entirely wrong."

At a press conference October 6, President Roosevelt said, in reply to questions about Willkie's call for a second front, that he had read only the headlines and did not consider the stories worthwhile reading. Some of those at the press conference regarded this as "pulling the rug from under Willkie." However, a few days later the President said that Willkie was carrying out extremely well just what he had been asked to do.

When Willkie was asked at the White House yesterday about the prospects of the United Nations, he said:

"Sure, we're going to win. We have the power and the resources on our side. But I think there is another question involved. That is,

Bill to Control All Rent in U.S. Gets Approval

Hotels, Rooming Houses, Stores and Offices Covered by Measure

By Robert W. Harvey
Post Staff Writer

The House Banking and Currency Committee yesterday gave its approval to legislation directing executive control of all commercial and residential rents, as well as hotel and rooming house rents, throughout the Nation.

Introduced at the request of Stabilization Director James F. Byrnes, the measure sets no date level at which the rentals are to be fixed. Instead, it permits the President to determine an equitable level at his own discretion.

The committee struck out a provision first written into the bill stipulating that they be pegged as of September 15, on the grounds that many business rents had already been hiked to exorbitant heights before that date.

Representative Steagall (Democrat) of Alabama said he hoped to get action on the bill in the chamber today, though the objection of some member to unanimous consent consideration may force it to wait over.

Experiences with the rent and rate problem in the District were cited frequently as the committee shaped the legislation—in fact, it was the treatment which one member received at the hands of a local hotel that caused the control of hostelry rates to be included in the bill.

Representative Lynch (Democrat) of New York declared that he had been charged $15 for a single night's lodging at a Washington hotel, and shortly afterward hotel rates were in the bill.

Also as a result of a practice which authorities have discovered in Washington—that of arranging sales of property in order to evict tenants and evade the rent control act—the President was given added

Kiel Battered By Hundreds Of Bombers

Huge British Planes Pound U-Boat Base With 'Block-Busters'

By the Associated Press

London, Oct. 14.—Hundreds of bombers, including many of Britain's biggest dynamite carriers, gave the German naval and submarine base of Kiel one of its most destructive blastings last night, it was announced today.

Two-ton "block busters" sprinkled with incendiaries smashed among the dockyards and shipbuilding facilities, leaving large fires and debris, pilots reported.

Meanwhile, in daylight today, Spitfire patrols attacked a freight train and workshops near Lanniom in northern France, and damaged two minesweepers off the French coast, while Beaufighters attacked German torpedo boats off the Dutch coast.

It was the seventieth raid on Kiel since September, 1939, but the first in nearly six months.

Among the bombers were the huge four-motored Lancasters, Stirlings and Halifaxes, capable of toting approximately eight tons of bombs over the 800-mile round-trip distance to Kiel.

Only nine bombers were lost and it was believed the "saturation" technique was used to crowd so many planes over the area in a short raid that the strong defenses of the vital naval base were swamped.

The air ministry said that at the end of the hour-long attack the searchlights were wavering and casting their beams in every direction, and that German gunfire had become ineffective.

Boys With Too Much Money

First Lady Offers Plan to Curb Illegitimacy in War Plant Areas

As a possible means of reducing illegitimate births among 13 to 15-year-old girls in war industry centers, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt yesterday advocated more wholesome recreational facilities for younger workers.

She told her press conference that one of the big problems of this war is not that of girls going around with soldiers, but of young girls hanging around factory gates where boys from 17 to 20 years of age "have more money than usual to spend."

Many of the boys are on their first jobs, and making good money which they spend right away having a good time, the First Lady said.

"There should be some attractive place where they could go dancing and get soft drinks," she declared.

Another war problem which Mrs. Roosevelt said the country must face is that of making housekeeping easier for women—if women are to be expected to do war work. The whole question of community cooking and community laundering must be gone into along with that of the day nursery problem, she said, if married women are going to be able to make their contribution to the war effort in the most efficient manner.

Housekeeping on an individual family basis may be unsound in wartime, she said. "No surveys have been made to determine just how much the community is thrown out of gear when a housekeeping woman goes to work," she said. "But it is evident from experiences in England that there are many eating and laundry problems we should be able to solve cooperatively."

"Everybody is wanting women workers now. That's what impressed me most on my trip through the war plants. Also, everybody was saying how good women workers were," she said.

In her inspection of Naval hospitals on the West Coast Mrs. Roosevelt said she learned the wounded of this war have a better chance of recovery to useful lives than ever before in history. She said she found several boys suffering "typical American" injuries.

"Some of them simply had run so fast they fell down the hatchways," she laughed. "That struck me as typically American."

Asked about the rumor she will go to England shortly, the First Lady said she thought it should be left at "some day" rather than "shortly." "If ever I could be certain I could accomplish something by going or make a contribution in any way, I would like to," she declared.

45 Crewmen Lost

1 U. S., 2 Brazilian Cargo Ships Among 4 Sunk in Atlantic

By the Associated Press

Sinking of four Allied merchantmen, with the loss of 45 crew members, by enemy submarines in the southwestern Atlantic was officially announced yesterday.

The Navy disclosed the loss of one Panamanian and one American vessel, during August and September, while the Brazilian government reported the loss of the freighters Lages and Ozorio, aggregating 8200 tons, last September 29 off the Brazilian coast.

Three of the Lages' 6-man crew were missing.

The United States vessel was torpedoed to the bottom in two minutes. Nine casualties were reported, but 27 crewmen safely reached a small Caribbean island and then were brought to the United States.

Thirty-three men were dead or missing in the action which destroyed the Panamanian merchantman. Thirty-eight survivors drifted three days in a single lifeboat before being picked up by a rescue ship. Rescued seamen related that the sturdy cargo carrier, attacked by two submarines, took two hours to sink.

The four latest sinkings boosted to 491 the Associated Press total of announced ship losses in the western Atlantic since Pearl Harbor.

Brazil's losses—the Lages and Ozoria were the first since the nation declared war on the Axis—mounted to 21.

U. S. Airfield And Shore Installations Are Battered

Enemy's Transports Able to Reinforce Troops Heavily in Solomons Fighting

By John G. Norris
Post Staff Writer

The Navy announced last night that Japanese troops were landing along the northern coast of Guadalcanal following a bombardment of our positions by enemy war vessels.

Nipponese transports began unloading soldiers early yesterday morning under the cover of Jap warships, a brief bulletin stated.

A major battle for the strategic island seemed to be brewing, if it were not already under way.

These developments were disclosed in a terse Navy communique issued at 7:30 p. m. It made no mention of any clash between our forces on the island and the reinforced Japanese units and contained no word of how the enemy move was developing.

The report of the new landing "has just been received," the Navy announcement stated.

United States Airdrome Shelled

Telling of the bombardment of our positions on Guadalcanal, the Navy said the United States airdrome and defense installations were shelled by Jap surface vessels Monday night.

Then early Wednesday morning, enemy troop ships, escorted by naval units, appeared off the northern coast of Guadalcanal and began unloading reinforcements on the shore to the westward of the American lines.

Despite the lack of details, there were indications that the new Japanese landing was a much more ambitious undertaking than previous enemy reinforcement moves.

The latter have been at night, and were reported by the Navy in communiques from time to time. Yesterday's landing, starting at dawn, was apparently continuing through daylight hours, which would indicate it was in force and was covered by strong warship units.

Chinese Reported Fleet

Just day before yesterday, Chungking reported that a large Japanese invasion fleet was heading for the southeastern Solomons.

It may well be, in fact, the opening of the long-expected, all-out enemy offensive aimed at driving our forces out of the islands.

Ranking naval chiefs have predicted such a Jap move and all signs have pointed to it. Top heads of the Navy, however, have confidently declared that the enemy's drive will be defeated.

Admiral Chester W. Nimitz, commander in chief of the Pacific Fleet, with jurisdiction over the Solomons theater, said only yesterday that he was confident that "we can hold what we have got there, consolidate our positions and eventu-

France Accepts U. S. Offer to Take Jewish Children

Vichy, Oct. 14 (U.P.).—The French Government has accepted an offer by the U. S. State Department to remove to America for the duration 5000 Jewish refugee children up to 18 years of age, most of them orphans or concentration camp inmates whose identification papers are lost, it was learned tonight.

Don Laurie, representing the American Jewish Relief Committee at Geneva, will arrive Saturday to discuss details with officials. It was understood Canada also may take about 1000 children and Santo Domingo 500. After the war all will be returned to their parents, if the families can be found.

The Society of Friends (Quakers) and other nonofficial relief groups will assume charge of actual transfers after diplomatic preliminaries are completed.

Nimitz Says U. S. Can Hold Solomons

Chief of Pacific Fleet Forecasts Eventual Drive From There

By Walter Clausen
Associated Press Staff Writer

Pearl Harbor, T. H., Oct. 14. Adm. Chester W. Nimitz, discussing his recent trip to the Solomon Islands battle zone, said today he was confident "we can hold what we have got and consolidate our positions and eventually start moving ahead."

The commander-in-chief of the Pacific Fleet said he conferred with Vice Admiral Robert L. Ghormley, naval commander in the South Pacific, and visited Guadalcanal and other island bases.

"But I didn't see a Jap—not even a prisoner," he remarked.

"I went down to the Solomon Islands area to see with my own eyes what I had been reading and hearing about. The men on Guadalcanal were in fine spirit and working hard from early morning until late at night.

"I have seen the character of the jungle on Guadalcanal and realize the difficulties of moving troops to certain parts of the country. Everywhere I found a fine spirit of cooperation.

"The Japanese must now realize they are going against American forces in that area. Particularly in the Marines they are meeting a people just as tough as they are themselves and just as well equipped and trained for jungle fighting as they are themselves...

"The Japs must not be underestimated. They are brave, resourceful, and for the most part experienced fighters. But they are meeting a people with those same characteristics now and suffering losses accordingly.

"Furthermore, the Japanese have a supply problem in the Solomons as difficult as our own."

Admiral Nimitz pointed out that the distance beween Guadalcanal and Pearl Harbor is about the same as between Guadalcanal and Tokyo, and that Malaya is even more distant.

He said that whether the Japanese were getting much from the Dutch East Indies to Rabaul, Japanese base on New Britain Island, was hard to determine, but added it was "safe to say the supply problem is giving them many a headache."

"Every ship lost by the action of our submarines increases their problems," he said.

War Sidelights

Hess' Wife Asks to Join Him in Prison

London, Oct. 14 (U.P.).—Ilse Hess, wife of the former Nazi deputy leader Rudolf Hess, has asked Britain's permission to join her husband in capticity in England, it was reported today in Commons when Laborite William James Thorne asked Foreign Secretary Eden what reply the government had made to Frau Hess request.

Hess was captured when he parachuted from a plane in Scotland in 1941, reportedly bearing a proposal for peace between Germany and Britain.

Fined First; Rejected

Denver, Oct. 14 (AP).—Former Marine Michael Chovkie, 52, credited with firing the first American shot of World War I, has been rejected for World War II, the Marine recruiting office announced today, because his vision is bad.

The first American shot of World War I was a warning rifle bullet put across the bow of a German boat in Guam Harbor April 6, 1917.

Reds Not Saying 'Enough'

New York, Oct. 14 (AP).—A complaint that the Russian refusal to admit defeat was cheating Germany of victory at Stalingrad was broadcast today by the Berlin radio.

"We have been in Stalingrad town for several weeks now," wrote Transocean News Agency's war reporter, Willy Beer. "But the enemy has never refused us rapid success so definitely as here. In and around Stalingrad he has piled up a wall of resistance which drew its units from all the Russian fronts.

"The Volga, along which this desolate pile of ruins stretches, has been under German control for some time already, but the Russians refuse to declare themselves beaten."

FBI Arrests Son Of Italian Admiral For Sedition

New York, Oct. 1. (AP)—The FBI today announced the arrest of Mario Albert Boet, 56, son of a late admiral of the Italian Navy, on a charge of wartime sedition.

P. E. Foxworth, FBI assistant director, said that FBI laboratory experts had traced to Boet letters containing disloyal and scurrilous material which had been sent to Government officials.

Foxworth said that in one letter, apparently intended for an undisclosed confederate, Boet wrote that he had been landed by an Axis U-boat on the south shore of Long Island Sound and was prepared to carry out secret commands given him by Axis officials.

Boet, a naturalized citizen, was a mineral salesman and was employed several years ago in the Italian consulate here in a minor capacity. Foxworth said that he was the son of the late Giovanni Boet, Italian admiral, and that he had a son in the United States Army Air Corps.

Cooper Reelected Head of Yale Club Of Washington

Charles G. Cooper, District manager of the Cooper-Bessemer Corp., was reelected president of the Yale Club of Washington at the group's first fall luncheon in the Annapolis Hotel, yesterday.

Other officers elected were: First vice president, H. W. Faulkner; second vice president, Marshall R. Diggs; secretary, Philip M. Fairbanks, and treasurer, David Porter Guest. Elected to the board of directors were Gregory S. Prince, A. Wilbur Mace, Gerhard A. Gesell and J. Kenly Bacon.

Guest of honor at the luncheon was Dr. J. Grafton Rogers, special assistant to the director of the Office of Strategic Services, who was formerly professor at Yale Law School and master of Timothy Dwight College. Dr. Rogers discussed the essential difference between the first and second World Wars, in relation to university men.

Leaflets Tell Italy of Biddle's Order on Aliens

Attorney General Biddle disclosed yesterday that copies of his Columbus Day address, announcing that 600,000 unnaturalized Italian aliens living in the United States would be removed from classification as "enemy aliens," now are being dropped in Italy.

He told the House Immigration Committee that the distribution—presumably by planes—of the speech, translated into Italian, had been undertaken as part of this Nation's psychological warfare, and predicted the action would have a "tremendous effect."

In response to questions, Biddle said that the Italian-born aliens in this country, through their bond purchases and their record under surveillance, had earned the Columbus Day action, but that he wasn't "prepared to say the same about German aliens in this country."

The attorney general said his department was contemplating a plan for removing alien parents of men serving with this country's armed forces from classification as enemy aliens.

U. S. Pilots Win First Major Desert Battle

By the Associated Press

Cairo, Oct. 14.—American fighter pilots have fought and won their first major battle over the Egyptian desert, it was disclosed today as heavy aerial warfare spread from Malta in mid-Mediterranean to the African mainland.

Twelve United States fighters, escorting South African bombers, tangled for 20 furious minutes Tuesday with 20 Axis fighters, Messerschmitts and Macchi 202s, which were guarding a formation of a dozen Stukas.

Two Messerschmitt 109s were shot down and others were damaged by the Americans. The South Africans dropped their bombs on enemy targets in the El Alamein battle zone and then also tore into the Stukas. They shot down two of these Junkers 87s, damaged six others and forced the remainder to jettison their bombs. The enemy fled.

No Allied losses were reported. The Americans who got the Messerschmitts were Lieut. Arnold D. Jaqua, South Bend, Ind., and First Lieut. George D. Mobbs, of Little Rock, Ark.

Despite a loss of at least 65 planes from Sunday through today, the enemy sent more craft over Malta. Four bombers and three fighters were shot down.

Thumbing Nose At Uncle Sam Costs Jap Life

Baltimore, Oct. 14 (AP).—Jap, don't thumb your nose at Uncle Sam! Sergt. Francis E. Hall, a gunner on the ill-fated carrier Yorktown, tells why:

"Bombs and shrapnel were falling all around us, but the gun crews were firing as coolly as if it were target practice.

"One Japanese torpedo plane came roaring by, not more than 50 feet over the water, and the pilot thumbed his nose at us.

Japs Land on Guadalcanal

On Tuesday Rear Admiral John S. McCain, new chief of the bureau of aeronautics, who came here from an aerial command in the Southwest Pacific, made a similar statement.

The latest Japanese move came on the heels of important American successes in the Solomons campaign. United States cruisers and destroyers intercepted an enemy force of cruisers, destroyers and troop ships just west of Guadalcanal Saturday night.

During the 30-minute battle that followed, one Jap heavy cruiser, four destroyers and a transport were sunk and the reinforcement fleet was forced to withdraw. We lost one destroyer. The next day, pursuing American planes took further toll of the enemy fleet.

Just before this fight, our Marines on Guadalcanal drove the Japs back and succeeded in expanding their lines.

Despite these and earlier reverses, the Tokyo high command has continued to pour forces into the northern Solomons, apparently preparatory to an all-or-nothing offensive against Guadalcanal.

In the fighting thus far, American forces have had the advantage of land-based aircraft from the airdrome on Guadalcanal and the use of tanks and artillery against enemy troops without them.

May Be Using Tanks

It is likely, however, that in the larger scale landing yesterday, the Japs were able to put big guns and tank units ashore.

Earlier in the day, the Navy announced that our submarines, operating in far Pacific waters, had sunk five more enemy ships, including a heavy cruiser.

The communique said that in addition to these sunk, three other Nip vessels were damaged by the submersible's torpedoes and that of these one probably sank.

Those listed as sunk were the heavy cruiser, a medium-sized cargo ship, a small cargo ship, a small tanker, and a small trawler. The damaged Jap vessels were a large tanker, a medium-sized tanker, and a medium-sized cargo ship. The latter was described as "probably sunk."

This announcement brought to 18 the number of enemy ships reported sunk or damaged by the Navy in the past two days. It also raised the United States subs' toll to 79 Jap ships sunk, 20 probably sunk and 24 damaged.

Hitler to Move British Prisoners To Bomb Areas

London (Thursday), Oct. 15 (INS). In an effort to deter the R. A. F. from further mass raids on Germany, Adolf Hitler was declared by all London morning papers today to have resorted to the brutal device of ordering British prisoners of war moved into areas likely to be bombed.

The R. A. F., however, will not be deterred by this Nazi "trick," it was stated authoritatively.

Belief was expressed that British war prisoners would be willing to take their chances if that would mean the defeat of the Nazis.

The Germans last week announced they had manacled 1376 British and Canadian prisoners taken at Dieppe, and the London press today said it is understood this was done under Hitler's "direct orders."

7½ Million Men Goal for U. S. Army in 1943

dorsed by Admiral Ernest J. King, commander of the fleet, who urged the Senate committee to "do it now, do it all at once and not in bites," saying "we'll take those 19 now and those 18 later."

While Navy, Marine Corps and Coast Guard have so far filled their rolls by volunteers, Admiral King pointed out that these services would face the same problems as the Army "if and when" they have to depend on Selective Service to supply their manpower.

Breakdown of Services

Stimson, testifying to the House committee, said General Marshall, before the Senate Committee, gave this breakdown of what the Nation's 1943 Army will include:

Airforce and supporting troops, 2,200,000 men.

Other ground combat forces, 3,300,000 men.

Services of supply, 1,000,000 men.

Training service and the men in training, 1,000,000.

Stimson said the figures were a "conservative estimate" subject to revision upward, while General Marshall testified that a decision on how much larger the Army should be probably could not be reached until August of next year.

Restrictions Are Opposed

Both Stimson and Marshall voiced opposition to the idea of forbidding use of teen-age men in combat service before they have received 12 months' training.

In line with their plea, and following a noon conference with President Roosevelt, Chairman May of the House committee, said he would withdraw his proposed restriction.

Keeping pace with this concession was the vote of the Senate committee to restrict its hearing to the issue of lowering the draft age, and not go into the general problem of manpower in its current hearing. Chairman Reynolds also announced that the committee had voted not to consider the proposed amendment of Senator Lee (Democrat) of Oklahoma, to give the Secretary of War broad powers for restricting sale of liquor in and near Army posts.

General Marshall, standing erect through more than an hour of testimony and questioning, told the Senate group that in their plans for a hard-hitting Army "it is our purpose to keep the war outside the western hemisphere, and to make our part offensive."

Laval Acts to Stop Labor Draft Strike

Strong Police Forces Rushed to Lyons, Britain Hears

By International News Service

London (Thursday), Oct. 15.—Pierre Laval has rushed strong police reinforcements to Lyons to put down a threatened revolt against the scheduled conscription of French workers for German war factories, the Daily Express reported today.

The German radio admitted a general strike had broken out in Lyons and the Vichy regime has "decided to take measures" to end it.

Laval reportedly fears that a widespread revolt may erupt in Lyons when the authorities post the names of 2,990 industrial workers conscripted for labor in Germany.

The Berlin broadcast quoted a Vichy dispatch as saying that workers in "several" railway shops had gone on strike Wednesday and that the strike quickly spread to "several private establishments."

The Express meanwhile quoted a "neutral diplomat" as saying unrest has even eaten into the ranks of the German army of occupation. He said 300 German occupational troops had deserted and fled to Switzerland to "avoid winter service in Russia."

A correspondent of the Soviet news agency, Tass, declared Laval secretly had accepted a demand for open French military cooperation with the Axis.

The Daily Telegraph quoted the Moscow radio as broadcasting a report that the Germans had warned Laval that, if anti-Nazi activities are not completely liquidated by the end of 1942, Germany will impose military control on unoccupied France and place the Vichy government under the Reich.

Billions for Navy

100 Million Added to War Cash Bill

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

The Senate Appropriations Committee yesterday approved $15,881,000,000 in war cash and contract authorizations, earmarking the bulk of the record defense sum for America's global Navy.

Adopted without change were House bill provisions for 14,611 more Navy planes and $9,510,000,000 in contract authority for sharply stepped-up carrier and warship construction.

As sent to the Senate for immediate action, the bill carried $104,240,206 more than the House measure, including a 100-million-dollar increase in the 500-million-dollar House appropriation for construction of war housing.

Senate increases in the measure included an item of $1,200,000 for the Treasury to finance absentee voting by the land and naval forces.

Other Senate increases:

Two hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars to supply the FBI with 50 million fingerprint cards for identification of war industry workers.

One million dollars for the War Manpower Commission to establish regional offices to aid in placing workers on the farms.

Five hundred thousand dollars for construction of the Palmer-Richardson Road in Alaska.

Miscellaneous Senate bill increases included $57,874 for Federal judiciary salaries and expenses, $20,000 for the Senate restaurant, $20,000 for Library of Congress books for the adult blind, $50,000 for salaries and expenses of the Thomas Jefferson Bicentennial Commission and $4500 for the Columbia Institution for the Deaf.

Md. Prison Labor Earns $714,800

Annapolis, Md., Oct. 14 (AP).—Gross earnings from prisoners in Maryland penal institutions amounted to $714,800.67 for the fiscal year ended September 30, reverting approximately $45,000 to the general treasury.

State Board of Correction Chairman Willis R. Jones advised Governor O'Conor today that net earnings from the Maryland penitentiary, the House of Correction, State penal farm and women's prison had absorbed "substantial budget deficits" and financed establishment of the parole, welfare and employment service in the department of correction.

In addition, Jones reported, balances accumulated to the credit of the board's special funds accounts amounted to approximately $65,000. Inventories, he said, have increased approximately by $100,000 during the year.

Aberdeen-Angus Cattle Average $685 at Auction

Warrenton, Va., Oct. 14 (AP).—Fifty animals brought an average of $685 at the Virginia Aberdeen-Angus Association's ninth annual sale yesterday at Ravenswood Farm, near Warrenton.

W. A. Jones of Easton, Md. and New York, paid the top price of $3500 for a female and also bid the same for the top bull.

Ravenwood Eric, 10th, bull calf donated by Ravenswood Farm to promote the sale of war bonds, put $160,000 in the Government's war chest and $1000 in the United Service Organizations fund.

The son of Ames Plantation Pride's Eric went to the Mennen Co. of Newark N. J., for $100,000 of war bonds, was immediately put up for resale and went this time to E. T. Chewning of Bethesda, Md. for $35,000, and on a third sale went to Aberdeen Angus Association, Chicago, for $25,000. The association then put him on the block for the benefit of the USO, and Eric again went to Mennen for $1000.

1086 in 18-19 Bracket Reported in County

Special Dispatch to The Post

Hagerstown, Md., Oct. 14.—Washington County's two Draft Boards announced that 1086 youths of 18 and 19 years of age will be available for induction when Congress authorizes their drafting, in addition to 516 who were 19 years of age when they registered June 30, this year, but who have since become 20 and are eligible for immediate induction.

Draft Board officials estimated that 18 and 19-year-olds would fill draft quotas for 5 or 6 months without calling on married men in 3-A.

Plane Output Reported Near 5000 Monthly

The Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce reported today that the aircraft industry "has been pressing toward the 5000" monthly production rate asked for by President Roosevelt after passing a rate of 4000 a month in May.

Between December 7 and October 1, the period the United States has been at war, the chamber said a greater number of warplanes had been turned out than were produced during the entire 16-year period prior to the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor.

More than four billion dollars worth of airplanes, engines and propellers will be produced during 1942, the organization forecast, and in noting that plane production was pressing at 5000 said there was "a huge increase in the number of heavy, long-range aircraft."

Recounting battle achievements of American pilots and planes, including a recent fight in the Solomons in which United States planes "destroyed a total of 42 Japanese fighter planes without the loss of a single machine," the organization commented:

"Despite the stellar performance of America's combat planes, the aircraft manufacturers are perfecting new and improved types of fighters, heavy bombers, medium bombers, patrol bombers, dive bombers, torpedo planes and scout observation planes which can fly higher, travel faster and spray more lead and destruction than the models presently in service. There are more than a score of new types of warplanes now undergoing tests and check-ups."

'War Cogs?'

House Votes Coast Guard Women's Unit

Legislation setting up a woman's auxiliary in the United States Coastguard was passed speedily yesterday by the House.

While no official title has been chosen for the new auxiliary—counterpart of the Army's WAACS and the Navy's WAVES—the designation "Women's Auxiliary Reserve of the Coast Guard" has been suggested.

Out of this title could be inexactly, but euphoniously derived the name "WAR COGS."

Chairman Bland (Democrat) of Virginia, of the House Merchant Marine Committee, explained on the floor that women going into the new auxiliary would fill shore jobs, thus releasing men for active sea service.

He said present plans call for a force of 10,000 Coast Guard women by the end of next year. They will wear uniforms, yet to be designed, and be paid on the same rate as men whose jobs they take over.

Hitler Ousts Chief of Staff, Sweden Says

By the Associated Press

London, Oct. 14.—Reports from Stockholm tonight said Adolf Hitler has dismissed Gen. Franz Halder, his chief of staff, and replaced him with Gen. Alfred Jodl, chief of operations in the high command. Both are artillery commanders.

The official Soviet news agency reported several German generals have been dismissed or reduced in rank, but mentioned no names.

A British broadcaster tonight said the German defense council, presided over by Reichsmarshal Hermann Goering and with Hitler present, met August 8 to decide what should be done "after the fall of Stalingrad."

Hitler was reported ho have expressed the opinion that when Stalingrad fell the German armies should establish a firm line in Russia and throw all their might westward for an invasion of Britain. Some of the generals, particularly Halder, argued that the Russian armies must be beaten first

Fighting Rages in Nazi-Made Croatian State

By the Associated Press

Bern, Switzerland, Oct. 14.—Followers of Dr. Vladimir Macek, Croatian peasant leader, have revolted against the government of Dr. Ante Pavelic and fighting is now raging in the Nazi-created state of Croatia, Yugoslav circles said tonight.

An army of about 4000 peasants was said to be attacking the khaki-uniformed Ustachi, the militia which Pavelic developed from the handful of Fascist-inclined Croatians whom he trained in exile in Italy.

They are fighting independently of Gen. Draja Mihailovic's men based in the Yugoslav mountains.

Yugoslav circles here said 46 trains were derailed during September and that German troops now are guarding the entire length of the Zagreb-Belgrade railroad.

Only yesterday the German radio announced the Pavelic Cabinet had resigned and a new Government had been sworn, pledged to govern according to "Ustachi principles."

Yugoslav sources disclosed in London September 25 that Macek and five other leaders of the Croatian Peasant Party had been arrested upon their refusal to collaborate with the Axis.

Macek had been under surveillance ever since the so-called independent state of Croatia was set up, but Pavelic had not given up hope of finally persuading him to take a cabinet position and lend his influence to the Government.

Americans Aid Yugoslavs

London, Oct. 14 (U.P.).—American-manned bombers are carrying supplies from the Middle East to the Yugoslav patriot army of Gen. Draja Mikhailovitch, and Italian occupation forces are strengthening their defenses along the Dalmation coast in fear of an Allied invasion, private advices from the Balkans reported tonight.

Yugoslav sources in Istanbul reported that shipments of Allied arms to Mikhailovitch's men have increased steadily in recent weeks. As a result, the Yugoslavs have made new raids against troop garrisons in Bulgaria and Italy.

Beer and Wine Sales Stop at 11 P. M. in Va.

By the Associated Press

Richmond, Va., Oct. 14.—Midnight brew bowed out of the Old Dominion tonight.

Effective tomorrow, wine and beer licensees of the State Alcoholic Beverage Control Board may sell wine and beer for on-premise consumption only between the hours of 6 a. m. and 11 p. m., instead of from 5 a. m. to 12 midnight.

ABC board officials said that only one or two licensees had voiced objection to the new regulation, which was published two weeks ago, while commendation had come from many sources, including many licensees.

The board said the regulation was designed to break up late concentrations around the places of licensees, particularly in areas where the population is swollen by war workers and service men.

While the regulation was intended primarily for war industrial areas, it was made State-wide in its application in order to avoid any problems in border areas.

British Adopt Drastic Shifts In Production

By Geoffrey Parsons, Jr.

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

London, Oct. 14.—Great Britain has adopted drastic new measures to attain still greater production from her manpower and machines, Oliver Lyttleton, Minister of Production, announced today.

War production, he said, has reached the point where little or no further labor can be drafted into war industries and where no increase in production can be attained by construction of new factories.

The problem now he said, was to reallocate labor, skilled and unskilled, to plants that will give Britain a still greater level of production.

The first result of the new order effective immediately, will involve a widespread transfer of labor from the less heavily burdened areas to areas which can no longer supply all the workers needed from their own labor resources.

Inefficient factories engaged in war work will be refused further orders and their labor will be transferred, where possible to more efficient plants.

No new manufacturing business can come into existence and no existing concern can change the nature of its business without a license under the new order. Where firms are shifted out of their present areas they will be allowed to move their key workers, but the bulk of their labor force must remain behind to go into factories where their work will be more productive.

"The war production of this country with that of the United States and Canada and the rest of the empire," he said, "must be planned as a comprehensive whole; but in this country, taken by itself, the period of widespread expansion of resources is passing and the main emphasis must now be laid on securing the best possible results from the resources that are available to us, namely, our own manpower, machine tools and the materials that are allocated to us from the common pool."

Zionists Urge Jewish Haven After the War

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

New York, Oct. 14.—The uprooted Jews of Europe can find a haven in Palestine, the land of Zion, after the United Nations win the war, speakers of two Jewish organizations said as they opened annual conventions here today.

Mrs. David de Sola Pool, national president of Hadassah, advanced this idea as she delivered the opening address before more than 1000 delegates, representing more than 80,000 members, at the Hotel Pennsylvania. Simon Shetzer, of Washington, executive director of the Zionist Organization of America, made a similar declaration to a closed meeting of the national adminstrative council.

"We think of the future and find that the endless change of Jewish history is adequate to the call of the moment," Mrs. De Sola Poll said. "Our dream was of Zion, the life of Israel in the land of Israel. It is today, again, the national homeland, and, we hope, forever. The Zionist dream gives the answer to the perplexing problems that beset us."

The Jews who have aided Palestine in the past 20 years, she said, have shown how abandoned land, parts of which had not been tilled for 2000 years, can be restored to fruitfulness.

Shetzer cited as accomplishments the building of a modern harbor at Haifa, the port at Tel-Aviv and the Hebrew University at Jerusalem.

The Hadassah conference was told by Mrs. Samuel J. Rosensohn of New York, national treasurer, that the 80,000 members had, by their efforts, sent $1,397,162 to the Holy Land this year for its welfare work. It included maintenance of a medical center, subsidies to hospitals, lunches to school children and similar child care, education and land reclamation.

Father Duhamel, Formerly of D. C., Slain by Japanese

A former Washingtonian was one of the two priests slain by Japanese with bayonets on Guadalcanal, it was revealed yesterday.

He was the Rev. Arthur Duhamel, 34, recently of Boston, Mass. He had studied at the Marist College here and was ordained here in 1937.

At the same time he was killed the Japs slew Father Henry Engberick, 33, of Utrecht, Netherlands, and two nuns, Sisters Sylvia and Odatya, believed to be from France. They were all bayonetted through the throat.

Kansas Group Assails Flour Price Ceiling

By the Associated Press

Members of Congress from wheat-producing areas protested today to James F. Byrnes, director of Economic Stabilization, against ceiling prices fixed for flour.

Senator Reed (Republican) of Kansas, who arranged the conference, said that Byrnes promised to take the matter up with Price Administrator Leon Henderson. Reed told the Senate Tuesday that the flour ceiling order violated the Anti-Inflation Act.

"We are hopeful of results fairly promptly and feel we have made some progress," said the Senator. "If the results we get are not satisfactory, Representative Hope (Republican) of Kansas, and I will introduce some amendments to the Anti-Inflation Act."

In the group calling on Byrnes with Reed were other Kansas members of Congress and Representative Rizley (Republican) of Oklahoma.

"There's a revolution going on in Congress as a result of this flour price ceiling order," said Reed, adding that additional signers had brought to 22 the number of Senators who had joined him in a letter to Henderson protesting the order was contrary to the Anti-Inflation Act.

In their letter, the Senators maintained the ceilings were based on a price of $1.02 a bushel for wheat and that this figure was only 78 per cent of the parity price of $1.34.

to answer one of the most frequently asked questions received by WLB since the October 3 order was issued on individual adjustments. He added that it authorized the granting of wage increases of the kind usually given because a worker has become more valuable because he has received more experience or is older, or because his occupation has changed."

Some significance was attached to the clause in the wage order which blocked the granting of individual boosts "to resist otherwise justifiable reductions in price ceilings" as an effort to force employers to adopt the practice of passing savings on to the consumer instead of to his employes wherever possible.

The order on individual increases was originally approved by WLB last week and then submitted to Economic Stabilization Director James F. Byrnes for his approval. Byrnes suggested some minor changes and sent it back to WLB for issuance.

authority to make regulations concerning the subsequent sale of rented property.

At the suggestion of Representative Crawford (Republican) of Michigan, who is the author of a bill to place local business rents under the Rent Administrator's control, the District of Columbia was specifically mentioned in the bill, despite its broad application to the entire country.

Crawford pointed out that "racketeering" on commercial rents here was the worst in the country, citing case after case of exorbitant increases ranging up to 200 per cent and more.

Byrnes told the committee that ceilings on business property rents were particularly needed, pointing out that neither the original Price Control Act nor the anti-inflation law permitted their control.

Sheared from the bill during the committee's deliberations was a section which would have empowered the President to control the use and occupancy of private property.

gram to get into full production.

At the same time, Jeffers is expected to work on methods of getting maximum utilization out of existing tire-molding capacity for the synthetic rubber program.

A shortage of molds for synthetic rubber tires is anticipated because it takes longer to make tires out of synthetic than out of natural rubber, it is understood.

The tire purchase program will be carried on with a grant of 150 million dollars from the Defense Supplies Corporation, a subsidiary of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. A total of 160 warehouses throughout the country have been designated as delivery points for the tires.

Henderson asked motorists to sell their tires as soon as possible so that work on reclaiming tires that could not otherwise be used may be started. He acknowledged that a shortage of sound recappable tire carcasses was already hampering the recapping program and that he hoped an adequate supply of usable casings would be secured from the program. An OPA spokesman estimated that from two million to five million usable tires would be received.

Nation-Wide Total Since Pearl Harbor Raised to 15,423

Four Washington men are missing and three others were wounded as result of direct war action, the Navy has reported to next of kin from September 22 to September 30.

Four missing men, of a Nation-wide total of 592, are: Michael Francis Collins, 24, fireman second class, United States Naval Reserve, 1330 Valley Place Southeast.

Francis Xavier King, 25, gunners mate, second class, United States Navy, 5615 Fourth Street Northwest.

William John Reynolds, 26, radioman, third class, United States Coast Guard, 752 Quebec Place Northwest.

James Williams Wooten, 21, fireman, first-class, United States Navy, whose address was 1005 K Street Southeast.

Three wounded men, of a Nation-wide total of 238, are: John Glennen Block, 38, chief boatswains mate, United States Navy, 309 Thirteenth Street Southeast; Walter N. Dybrack, sergeant, United States Marine Corps Reserve, whose mother's address was given as 525 Fourth Street Southeast; and Jack I. Nelson, 32, first sergeant, United States Marine Corps, 1727 Capitol Avenue Northeast.

Total Raised to 15,423

List No. 14, released yesterday and reporting 161 dead, brings Navy, Marine Corps and Coast Guard casualties since Pearl Harbor to a total of 15,423, of whom 4280 are reported dead, 1452 wounded and 9711 missing.

Navy casualty lists report all casualties resulting from direct action, including the names of those who were lost in accidents directly connected with wartime operations. Some of those classified as missing may have been rescued at sea and landed at isolated spots or otherwise made their way to safety at places from which they have had no opportunity to communicate with United States Naval authorities, the Navy says.

Well-Known Athlete

Francis X. King, a native of Washington, held the title of lightweight champion of the Hawaiian Islands in 1938. A well-known athlete here, he graduated from Central High School. His father, Lieut. John Joseph King, is now stationed at the training station, Manhattan Beach, Brooklyn, N. Y. He has a sister, Margaret Mary, and two brothers, Michael H. and John Joseph, jr., both in the Army.

Michael F. Collins went to St. Teresa's School here and graduated from Eastern High School. He was two years in the Naval Reserve before going into active service May 7, 1941. He was a member of St. Teresa's Church, the Holy Name Society, and the Elks.

His parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Thomas Collins, live at 1330 Valley Place Southeast. He has another brother in the Navy, one as a defense worker at Pearl Harbor, and two sisters.

Only Coast Guard Casualty

The only Coast Guard casualty reported for the Nation in list No. 14 is a native of Washington, William J. Reynolds. He graduated from business high school here and entered a radio school. In May, 1941 he rejoined the Coast Guard which he had quit after three years of service in 1940.

Mrs. Thelma L. Reynolds, his wife, and 5-months-old William John, jr., live at 752 Quebec Place Northwest.

James W. Wooten joined the Navy in 1940 and was stationed in the District at first. He was born in Oklahoma City. His wife, Mrs. Catherine Jeannie Wooten, has not seen much of her husband since their wedding in July 1941. The last time she saw him was January 5, and the last letter she received from her husband was dated May 20. Mrs. Wooten now lives at Anacostia, D. C.

In Navy 22 Years

John G. Block, who is reported wounded, has been in the Navy for 22 years. He is a native of Arlington, Va., where his father, John Block, still lives. His wife, Mrs. Angela L. Block, makes her home at 309 Thirteenth Street Southeast.

Jack I. Nelson has been with the Marine Corps for over 14 years. He was born in Atlanta, Ga., where his parents make their home. A week ago Mrs. Nelson received a cablegram from her husband sending his regards to his baby Carol, whom he has never seen and whom he does not even know to be a girl. Carol is two months old. Mrs. Nelson lives with her three children, Gerald, 8; Joan, 3, and Carol, at 1727 Capitol Avenue Northeast.

In the same list, three Maryland men were reported dead, five wounded and six missing. Among the missing were:

James Wallace Lyon, fireman, first class, Navy, whose nearest of kin was his father, Hiram Wallace Lyon, 3507 Perry Street, Mount Rainier.

Man Claiming Moslem Faith Convicted of Draft Evasion

A District Court jury yesterday convicted Benjamin Elijah Mitchell, 41-year-old Negro—who claimed his adherence to the Moslem faith exempts him from provisions of American laws—on a charge of failure to register for the draft.

He is the sixth Moslem to be found guilty here of violation of the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940.

Mitchell, formerly an employe in the Washington Navy Yard and later a carpenter in the Procurement Division of the Treasury Department, admitted he failed to register, but had pleaded innocent, nevertheless.

In charging the jury, Justice James M. Proctor pointed out that persons whose religion forbids participation in warfare are permitted, under law, to present their case to authorities. But, the jurist added, they must register under the act as conscientious objectors.

Prosecution of another similar case—that of Gulan Bogan of Chicago, who called himself Elijah Mohammed—is pending in District Court.

Higgins' Ability Is Needed For War Effort, Nelson Says

By John Elliott

New York Herald-Tribune Staff Writer

Asserting that Andrew J. Higgins, New Orleans advocate of production-line ship construction, "must come into this war effort in a bigger way," Donald M. Nelson, chairman of the War Labor Board, said yesterday that his agency was considering the use of the unfinished Higgins shipyard facilities for other war purposes.

Nelson's announcement was made in the course of a two-hour hearing before an American Federation of Labor committee investigating the cancellation by the Maritime Commission last summer of its contract for the New Orleans shipyard to produce 200 liberty ships. Although the WPB chief declined to comment, the committee revealed a portion of what it said was his evidence.

Nelson told the committee that he considered Higgins "an outstanding manufacturer of our country" and said that he was "going to do everything I can to see" that the New Orleans shipbuilder got back into the war production business.

Acknowledging the importance of the Higgins project and his ability to get things done, Nelson testified, "this country needs more men of the Higgins type participating to a greater extent in our production. I feel that it is my duty to see that the facilities involved in the cancellation of the Higgins contract are utilized for the war effort and along that line we now have the facilities under consideration."

Higgins' contract was canceled by the Maritime Commission, allegedly because of the steel shortage. The A. F. of L. committee, headed by Holt Ross, representative of the Southern district of that union, was set up by William Green, A. F. of L. president, to investigate the cancellation. The committee expects to conclude its labors within a few days and Ross has predicted "startling information" concerning the results of its inquiry.

Nelson, according to Ross, offered the committee the full cooperation of WPB in his investigation, promising that Mordecai Ezekial, WPB economist, and M. W. Branch, head of the plate and shape unit of WPB's iron and steel branch, would appear before the committee to discuss the steel situation as related to the Higgins contract.

Defense Group To 'Go It Alone'

The American-Irish Defense Association of the District last night voted to disassociate itself from the national organization because, it was felt, it could accomplish more as a separate unit.

Plans for the fall and winter were made which include having speakers from England and Ireland, and round table discussions of the best means of aiding the war effort and of methods of bettering relations between Ireland and America.

Mrs. Helen Herbert Peck, secretary, issued a call to all Americans of Irish descent to aid in the war work of the association.

Tax Agreement Is Expected By Weekend

House and Senate conferees yesterday waded through technical tax bill amendments toward an expected agreement on the eight billion dollar revenue measure by the end of this week.

Final passage next week was indicated as leading House advocates of increased corporation levies called off a scheduled floor fight on the Senate's revised rates.

Pending assured conference acceptance of the 40 per cent combined corporate normal and surtax, Representative Dingell (Democrat) of Michigan said a protracted House fight on the provision would "serve no purpose and only delay the bill."

Dingell, one of a group of Ways and Means Committeemen who forced a 45 per cent rate in the House bill, nevertheless, called the lower Senate tax a "mistake." Combined with the 5 per cent "victory" tax on individuals, he said it "saddled too much of the burden on the little fellow."

Conferees yesterday "passed over" the corporate tax schedule and the controversial 5 per cent "victory" levy on individual income over $624 a year, but are expected to approve both provisions of the Senate bill.

If adopted, the victory tax may have only a brief life. Sales tax advocates claim the strength to substitute a retail levy for forthcoming Treasury recommendations for a $6,500,000,000 "spending tax." Part of the sales tax strategy on the next bill calls for converting the "victory" tax into a compulsory savings program.

Noncontroversial provisions agreed to in yesterday's first House-Senate tax conference include the Senate amendment waiving present law requirements that tax returns be notarized. Another agreement continues present law tax exemptions, ($750 for single and $1500 for married) for noncommissioned personnel in the armed forces.

200 Demountable Homes Planned For Georgia Ave.

The Alley Dwelling Authority is working on plans to erect 200 demountable family units for white war workers on the 22-acre Shoemaker tract on Georgia Avenue, Executive Officer John Ihlder said yesterday.

The buildings will be similar to those now nearing completion at Thirty-fifth Street and Reservoir Road Northwest. Each will have a kitchen and bath, and rents will be set as low as possible, Ihlder said. Not more than two persons per bedroom will be permitted to occupy the units, he said.

Under terms of the lease negotiated with the heirs of Francis D. Shoemaker the demountables must be removed within one year following the end of the war. The Shoemaker tract lies between Georgia Avenue, Blair Road, Geranium Street, and Eastern Avenue Northwest.

It was announced yesterday that of the 21 charter members of the lodge, only 3 survive. They are James R. English, Hezekiah Day and Zadoc M. Cooke, all of Gaithersburg.

Willkie Meets His Pilot's Family

ON THE WASHINGTON SCENE—Back in Washington to report to President Roosevelt on his tour of the world's battlefronts, Wendell Willkie yesterday met the wife and 4-year-old daughter of his pilot on the world-circling trip. Sally wasn't a bit shy as she greeted Willkie from the arms of her father, Maj. Richard Kight of Washington, commander of the Army Ferry Command plane Gulliver

how soon are we going to win, at what cost in human values, and what kind of world are we going to have afterwards?"

Asked whether he still thought there had been "needless delay" in opening a second front, Willkie said that such a conclusion could be drawn from what he had said in Moscow and what he was now saying.

He said he had talked to military men all over the world—in Egypt, the Middle East and in Russia—before he made his second-front statement in Moscow.

Most Leaders Civilians

"Most of the leaders of the governments in the world are nonmilitary men," he said, "and what they do is to take the conflicting opinions of military experts before deciding on a course of action."

When he said in Moscow that a second front was "both feasible and posisble," Willkie told the reporters, he had the benefit of the opinions of military men he had consulted in all the countries through which he travelled.

Willkie declined to say whether he had talked about a second front to President Roosevelt. He took up the thread of his discussion about civilian and military leaders.

"Let's take England," he said. "Churchill may have served in the army briefly. So did I. Yet Mr. Churchill determines his course of action by getting the opinions of the experts. The same things happens here in the United States."

Has Had Some Experience

Willkie said that, even though he had been in the A. E. F., he did not consider himself an expert. He added, however, that as a business man he had had some experience in applying his judgment to the opinions of experts in determining on a course of action.

Apparently harking back to his Moscow statement that the Allied high command could stand some prodding, Willkie said:

"I think that the thing that makes democracy effective is the application of public opinion on our leaders, and I don't think military men are any more sacrocanet than any others."

He recalled to the Washington newspapermen that last winter he had suggested that we ought to have a single head of our armed forces and had urged Gen. Douglas MacArthur for the post. At that time, he said, there were objections to such a suggestion on the ground that laymen should not interfere in military matters.

He'll Report to United States

But now, he said, most people—including military strategists—agree that there should be such a leader and agree further that he should be a man of the MacArthur type.

In a prepared statement, Willkie outlined the purpose of his great flight around the world, and concluded:

"I have a plane waiting for me now at the airport, to take me back to New York where I started on this trip. I intend to take a few days of rest in Indiana and then I shall go to work on what I myself consider the most important thing I can do—making careful, crystal clear reports to the American people.

"How long that will take I don't know."

WPB May Put Plastics in Food Cans to Conserve Tinplate

Food experts at the War Production Board have an idea they believe will discourage hoarding of canned goods and, at the same time, save tinplate, highly critical war material.

The idea, disclosed at WPB yesterday, calls for replacing tin in the tops and bottoms of cans with a special plastic material. The anti-hoarding feature of the idea springs from the fact that "plastic cans" won't preserve foods as long as they can be kept in all-tin containers.

WPB sources explained that the plastic, which is still being tested, probably would preserve foods long enough to permit consumption of canned perishables at a normal and regular rate, with a margin for safety.

But, said the experts, foods packed in plastics will not keep beyond a specified length of time and therefore must be eaten, not hoarded.

If "plastic cans" come into use, they will bear labels warning the purchaser that "preservation of food in this container is not guaranteed beyond (specified date)."

Meanwhile yesterday, Price Administrator Leon Henderson, in recognition of the enormously detailed problem of keeping down food prices in conformity with President Roosevelt's recent economic stabilization order, created a food price division within the Office of Price Administration and named A. C. Hoffman as its director.

The new division is charged with responsibility for formulating, initiating and administering food-price regulations as well as maintaining industry relations and conducting price research and analysis.

Filipinos Aid U. S. By Guerilla War, Speaker Says

While Filipinos under the Japanese yoke are giving their lives in continued resistance to the invaders, others of their countrymen are giving their money, efforts and time to aid the United Nations toward ultimate victory, Dr. Diosdado M. Yap, Filipino lecturer and writer, told the Washington Rotary Club yesterday.

Dr. Yap reviewed the history of Filipino-American relations and said his countrymen's love of freedom was unquenchable. He said that one of the primary aims of the United States was the utter defeat of Japan and establishment of Philippine freedom.

That the Filipino people are willing to die for their freedom is proven by their continued guerilla warfare against the invading horde, he said.

He then pointed to the service being rendered the war effort by others in the army, navy and other forces, workers in war plants, farmers and the purchasers of war bonds.

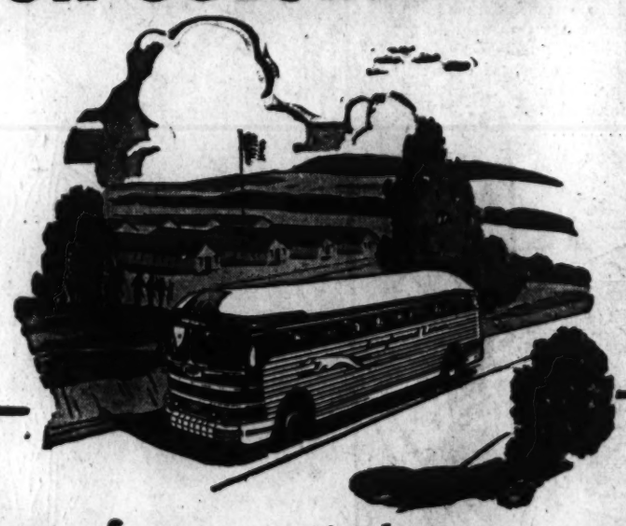
GREYHOUND CHANGES ALL SCHEDULES ON OCTOBER 15TH*



to conform with new wartime regulations of O.D.T.

Throughout the nation Greyhound buses will start operating on new schedules October 15th — to conform with the new wartime regulations of the Office of Defense Transportation.

Although O.D.T. granted the bus lines 15 extra days to make this sweeping change, even this period is too short to complete full rearrangement of a service that has transported more than 85 million wartime travelers since Pearl Harbor. For a short period, until every detail of the new service is carefully worked out, you may be inconvenienced on some occasions.

For instance, you may find that connections are not as well-timed as in the past—it may be difficult to get complete information about some trips — telephones at the Greyhound terminal may be congested with calls for last-minute details — new time tables may not be available. You may be sure, however, that Greyhound is doing everything possible to maintain its high standards of service under unusual conditions.

Yet on the whole, you may not find the change to the 35-mile-per-hour speed limit as marked as you might expect. For several months there has been a 40-mile-per-hour limit on all Greyhound buses — yet this has not prevented these buses from carrying half again as many passengers as before.

Now when every bus, every tire, every gallon of gasoline must be used to full advantage there are ways that you can help. Travel on mid-week days when possible—take along less baggage than usual —and get tickets and information in advance.

PACKING UP TO LEAVE—Theodora Smith, secretary to Director Oveta Culp Hobby of the WAAC, prepares to leave Saturday for Fort Des Moines to begin training as an auxiliary

Action to Give WAACS Free Postage Planned

Congressional action will be taken soon to amend "inequities" in the present posal laws which permit members of the WAVES to send mail postage-free while members of the WAACS must pay postage, it was announced yesterday by Representative Andrew J. May, Democrat of Kentucky, chairman of the House Military Affairs Committee.

The War Department found it necessary yesterday to rescind the privileges heretofore accorded the WAACS which allowed them to send their letters without postage, explaining that postal laws giving this right to soldiers specifies that it is intended for "members of the armed forces." The WAACS are an auxiliary organization serving "with" the armed forces.

Mr. May said he would probably introduce an amendment clearing up the situation by inserting a sentence or two in the statute saying that the privilege would be extended to organizations "serving with the armed forces."

30,000 Men Hunt For Missing Girl

San Francisco, Oct. 14. (AP)—Nearly 30,000 men, including all of San Francisco's civilian defense forces, began a house-to-house hunt tonight for a 4-year-old girl who disappeared yesterday afternoon, perhaps kidnaped by a degenerate.

The girl is brown-eyed Vivian Miller, daughter of a shipyard worker.

Public Visits Free Nursery Center Here

Twenty youngsters and their newly-decorated nursery home—Washington's first free day care center—were put on exhibit for the public for the first time yesterday at a reception at the nursery, 1325 Sixteenth Street Northwest.

All children had instructions to proceed with their play just as if it had been any other rainy afternoon in the young life of the center, which was launched just two weeks ago by the Volunteers of America.

With members of the District advisory board of the Volunteers acting as hosts, visitors were conducted on a tour of the big old greenstone house, remodeled within the last month to fit the stature of three-to-five-year-olds. Since the depression the Volunteers had kept the house as a haven for homeless girls looking for jobs. With the war boom its usefulness in that capacity came to an end.

No speeches were scheduled for yesterday's "party," but Mrs. Walter O. Ulrey, who with her husband, Major Ulrey, keeps the nursery under her supervising eye, sang several hymns. Major and Mrs. Ulrey are the local commanders of the Volunteers of America. Mrs. Edward E. Gann and Miss Temple Bailey were invited to pour tea for the guests.

Smuts' London Visit Seen as Significant

New York, Oct. 14. (AP)—The Berlin radio suggested today the London visit of Premier Jan Christiaan Smuts of the Union of South Africa, meant that big British and American military moves may be in the making in North and West Africa. The radio said Smuts would go to Washington to confer with President Roosevelt.

Weight Value of Sugar Stamp No. 9 Is Reduced to 3 Pounds

The next sugar rationing stamp, No. 9, will have a weight value of only three pounds instead of the previous value of five pounds, it was announced yesterday by L. P. Steuart, District rationing officer for OPA. It will cover the period beginning November 1 to December 15, inclusive.

Persons still having the No. 8 stamp in their ration book will be able to use it until midnight October 31, after which it will be void. Applications for sugar allotments for trade users for the November-December ration period will be accepted on and after October 15, it was announced. Thereafter, applications may be filed to and including November 5 without any pro-rata loss of allotments.

Stating there will be no extra or bonus allotments this time, Steuart said that institutional users, such as restaurants, also will be affected by the new regulations. Institutional users will get but 60 per cent of the previous sugar ration; industrial users, 70 per cent; and hospitals will receive 85 per cent. Steuart added, however, that adjustments may be made for institutional users on the basis of increased number of meals served or for industrial users on the basis of population increase.

Roosevelt Again Invites Rios

President Roosevelt last night reiterated his invitation to President Juan Antonio Rios of Chile to visit the United States.

In a message to Rios, made public tonight by the State Department, Mr. Roosevelt said he still hoped the Chilean President would be able to make his postponed trip "in a short time."

Rios had been scheduled to leave Santiago yesterday, to arrive here October 22. The trip, however, was "postponed" due to Chilean displeasure over the speech made by Acting Secretary of State Sumner Welles at Boston on October 8, in which Welles said that Chile and Argentina had failed to suppress Axis agents operating in these two countries, "for hostile activities against their neighbors."

President Roosevelt's message to Rios last night, however, completely ignored the Chilean complaint against Welles' utterances, and was very friendly.

Materials Control Settlement Near

Steel and Automobile Industries Struggle To Rule Production

By Robert DeVore
Post Staff Writer

A struggle between the powerful steel and automobile industries in advocacy of their respective plans for controlling the flow of war materials—a contest whose outcome will determine which, if either, of these industrial giants will dominate war production—is due to be settled by this weekend, is was learned yesterday.

In striving to settle the dispute, WPB officials have invoked the utmost secrecy to guard against premature disclosure of their plans until they can be formulated definitely and announced officially.

Some weeks ago, the steel industry with the support of the then chief of the iron and steel branch, Reese Taylor, and Bernard M. Baruch, chief of the War Industries Board of the first World War, brought into WPB what has become known as the steel budget plan.

Protest Stays Adoption of Plan

The plan at the time called for application only for steel, most important of all the critical war materials, but it was understood that the program was to have been utilized in the control of all materials.

The plan would have assigned steel quotas to the various steel "claimants"—Army, Navy, Maritime Commission, etc.—on the basis of exact knowledge of amounts of each material needed to make a given war product and on the basis of a production program tailored to fit material supplies.

More recently, the automobile industry, through its spokesmen, landed in a body on WPB with protests that unless present and proposed methods of handling materials were quickly changed war production in the last three months of the year would be dangerously hampered.

The auto protest arrived just as Ferdinand Eberstadt, WPB vice chairman and responsible for materials scheduling, was about to adopt the steel plan.

Control by Industry

Industry executives called upon the WPB to adopt the automobile plan which calls for a production schedule that can be met with materials available and which would require procurement agencies to adhere to that schedule. Once such a master plan has been worked out, the auto industry would like to be authorized to order materials for itself and its subcontractors. The industry contends that "natural forces" would prevent members of the industry from accumulating excessive inventories.

Eberstadt, it was reported, has insisted that any plan must put the Government, and not the automobile or any other industry, in control of materials flow. He also has insisted that in any plan, "paper work" must be cut to the minimum.

Eberstadt heads a committee of Ernest Kanzler, WPB operations director, and the materials branch chiefs, which is determining what kind of a plan WPB will use. Drafting of the final plan will be the task of a committee headed by J. A. Krug, deputy operations director.

Green Reelected

A. F. L. Told Nazi Defeat Sure in 1943

By Joseph A. Loftus
Associated Press Staff Writer

Toronto, Ont., Oct. 14.—The American Federation of Labor reelected President William Green, Secretary-Treasurer George Meany, and all 13 vice presidents today and retained all the 15 officers on the executive council.

Accepting his eighteenth full term, Green expressed belief "The year 1943 is going to be the decisive year, and some time in this decisive year the German machine is going to collapse of itself." He said labor must regard unity in its ranks in 1943 as a "solemn objective."

The convention, headed for adjournment tonight, approved a statement of policy on international labor relations saying the exclusion of Soviet trade unions and others from the Anglo-American trade union committees should not be construed as lack of support in any measure of the workers of Russia and other United Nations.

Boston was chosen for the 1943 convention.

John P. Frey, secretary of the resolutions committee, put the convention on record as not opposing wartime "job freezing," as such, but as asking only proper safeguards for the affected workers.

The delegates heard Daniel J. Tobin, president of the teamsters, vehemently denounce the remarks delivered yesterday by A. Philip Randolph on the racial discrimination and Indian nationalist issues. Randolph is the college-educated Negro president of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters.

Tobin, who was a fraternal delegate last month to the British Trades Union Congress, said Randolph had "smeared" and "insulted" the congress. He said that Randolph had implied that the British and American trade unions were enjoying deluxe conditions at the expense of persecutions in India.

"There wasn't a man in that Congress," said Tobin, "who did not believe wholeheartedly in freedom or self-government for the people of India." He said Sir Stafford Cripps and America's Louis Johnson had investigated and found "an impossible situation."

Discussing Randolph's charges of discrimination in union membership, Tobin contended Randolph was talking to "his own people" and that "men of this type who make those utterances, educated men, are doing more, in my individual opinion, to destroy the future progress of the black man, which we are trying to bring about, than any section within a local union constitution or international bylaw."

Randolph went to a microphone on the floor and appealed several times for the floor, but each time Green gaveled him into silence. A couple of cries of "Sit down" were heard, and Randolph retired.

Portuguese Study Gains At University of Texas

Austin, Tex. (U.P.).—Portuguese is proving a popular language study at the University of Texas. Fifty-eight students have enrolled for it this fall.

Dr. E. R. Sims, professor of Romance languages, said it is the only romance language with increased number of students this year. Enrollment in French and Spanish classes decreased. The number of students of Italian remained the same.

Unless the courses have been added this year in other colleges, the only major universities teaching Portuguese are Texas, Harvard, California and Wisconsin.

Women Seen As Life Guards Next Summer

Ventnor, N. J. (U.P.).—Mayor Harry S. Hodson predicts female lifeguards on the beaches of this shore resort next summer as well as skirted policewomen.

Hodson said that 26 of Ventnor's normal complement of 33 life guards already are in the armed services or expecting to be called shortly. Reenlistments of World War I veterans in the Ventnor police force may force the city to call upon women for daytime work, he said.

Adjoining Atlantic City does not have such a problem, according to Public Safety Director William S. Cuthbert. He said that 44 of the 100-man beach patrol were recruited from the graduating class of Atlantic City High School. The police force is depending upon the aid of civilian defense volunteers.

E. D. Woodyard Dies; Headed 22 Weeklies

By the Associated Press

Wytheville, Va., Oct. 14.—Edward D. (Ted) Woodyard, 45, of Spencer, W. Va., and New York, who rose from small town reporter to head of a chain of 22 weekly newspapers, was found dead today in his hotel room in Wytcliville.

The publisher had stopped here en route from Spencer to New York. Authorities, who were notified by Woodyard's associates that he was missing, said he apparently died Monday of natural causes.

Woodyard was chairman of the board of Woodyard Publications, Inc., which operates 17 weeklies in West Virginia; president of Woodyard Publications of Delaware, and manager of the Camelot Publishing Co. of Alexandria, Va.

Woodyard began his newspaper career on the Spencer Times-Record, largest of the chain, in 1918 immediately after his graduation from West Virginia University.

He worked then for Sam Simmons, co-owner of the paper with Woodyard's father, the late Harry C. Woodyard who served in Congress from the Fourth West Virginia District. Simmons' interests later were absorbed by the Woodyards.

For the past 10 years Woodyard spent most of his time in New York, looking after the family's business interests there.

In 1938 he organized Woodyard Associates, an advertising agency, and was its president until the firm was merged in 1941 with the American Press Association.

The Woodyards, in addition to holdings in West Virginia and one paper in Delaware, operated four weeklies in Virginia.

Woodyard was a past president of the West Virginia Newspaper Council. He is survived by two brothers, Henry, who is president of Woodyard Publications, and William, member of the board of directors, both of whom reside in Spencer.

U. M. W. Opens Drive to Expand Membership

By John Frye
Associated Press Staff Writer

Cincinnati, Oct. 14.—The United Mine Workers of America, urged by John L. Lewis to become more powerful to help win the war, today started a far-flung new campaign to "organize the unorganized."

Closing their eight-day thirty-seventh biennial convention, the miners decided not to submit wage increase demands until negotiations for a two-year contract start next March; promised to work 42 hours instead of 35 a week as requested by Solid Fuels Coordinator Ickes, if the Government would cooperate on prices, transportation an priorities for mine equipment, and then heard President Lewis set these immediate organizational objectives:

1. "Great segments of agricultural workers are knocking at the door of the U. M. W. for assistance in becoming free and independent citizens." He did not elaborate but associates predicted yesterday that grain and cattle fields would be sought first by District 50, a unit authorized by the convention to work outside the coal industry.

2. Twenty thousand chemical workers in the Kanawha Valley of West Virginia who "must be organized into District 50." Lewis declared "it matters not if they are employed by Union Carbide or duPont—they are free men and women."

3. Fifty thousand coal mine supervisory employes with no hiring or firing powers. These have been ineligible for U. M. W. membership and have formed a union of their own, but the convention amended the constitution to admit them and Lewis described them as "practical" coal miners and former members whose standards are affected by the industry's wage structure.

He again promised no raids on established unions.

"There is a task throughout the country," Lewis told the 2800 delegates in his 45-minute closing speech. "We want to organize the unorganized. We can help our country more in the war effort by becoming more powerful as a union."

Bellaire, Ohio (U.P.).—Servicemen from Bellaire won't go hungry for home news.

The Young People's Society of the Neffs-Coalbrook Presbyterian Church is publishing a weekly four-page mimeographed edition of the home town news, appropriately named "Home Front."

Its first issue went to 122 of the 167 Bellaire men in the service.

IF YOU ARE INCLUDED IN THIS LIST, YOU'RE ELIGIBLE TO BUY

There are seven major classifications for persons eligible to buy new cars under basic rationing rules.

These include: (1) persons engaged in the production of war materials or the prosecution of the war, directly or indirectly; (2) physicians, nurses, clergymen, veterinarians; (3) car-owners engaged in public service, such as fire departments, public health, highway maintenance, etc.; (4) owners of taxicabs and other means of transportation; (5) farmers; (6) newspaper wholesalers; and (7) traveling salesmen in certain fields.

Your Buick dealer will be very glad to help you determine whether you come under the rules of eligibility. He will also be glad to help you fill out the proper applications.

Don't guess about your eligibility—see your Buick dealer now and make sure.

If you Really Need a Car, you can—and should—get a New One NOW!

This car wants a wartime job!

It's ready and eager to get out helping someone do his part in the war effort—you'll be doing your country a patriotic service if you'll put it to work at a really needful job, instead of letting it stand idly by.

This is one of many brand-new, unused, 1942 models built before automobile production ceased—models that are safer, more dependable and, in many cases, more economical to run than older cars which have passed their prime.

That is why present car-buying regulations take into consideration the age and condition of your present car as well as the use you make of a car.

Thus if you are included in any of the seven major classifications of eligible buyers, chances are that you not only can but should replace your present car with a new one now.

You will ride on tires with their whole life before them. In this car, you'll travel behind a Buick FIREBALL valve-in-head straight-eight engine that makes the most of every single drop of fuel and oil.

Even the wheels in this Buick help get maximum mileage from tires, because the whole car is built to serve you through the duration.

The panel lists the seven major classifications of car-owners who are eligible to buy new cars now. If you are included—or think you might be—see your Buick dealer now about giving one of these eager beauties a wartime job to do.

Buick factories have been all-out on war production for months—but Buick dealers can make immediate deliveries from large and complete stocks.

IN THE BELIEF THAT AN UNWARRANTED AND SERIOUS THREAT TO THE ECONOMY OF COTTON CONSUMPTION HAS BEEN BROUGHT ABOUT WITHOUT ANY RESULTANT ADVANTAGE TO THE WAR EFFORT . . .

THE SOUTHERN GOVERNORS CONFERENCE CALLS TO THE ATTENTION OF THE CONGRESS AND THE WAR PRODUCTION BOARD . . .

NATIONAL COTTON COUNCIL OF AMERICA

SIXTY NINE UNION — MEMPHIS TENNESSEE

September 29, 1942

Air Mail

Governor Frank M. Dixon
Chairman, Southern Governors Conference
State Capitol
Montgomery, Alabama

Dear Governor Dixon:

Last week we were advised that the Requirements Committee of WPB had approved expansion of production facilities for "high tenacity" rayon to the extent of 50,000,000 pounds annually, over and above the 25,000,000 pound expansion program already in progress, for use in automobile tires. The present program doubles present capacity and the contemplated program would quadruple it.

The raw cotton industry, all branches of which from producers to spinners are represented in the National Cotton Council, is of course vitally interested in the tire market, which is by 50 percent the largest single outlet for American cotton. Like all good Americans, our first interest and concern above all others is in winning this war as quickly and completely as possible. The facts before us, however, do not indicate that the rayon expansion program will contribute to the successful prosecution of the war, but on the other hand will definitely do serious injury and injustice to 10,000,000 American cotton farmers, both during and after the war.

We have been following this matter closely since it was first proposed some months ago. The expansion program was first agitated solely on the basis that rayon, being thinner than conventional cotton tire cords, would save rubber. The cotton mills, in cooperation with some of the rubber companies, promptly produced a thinner cord which would save certainly as much rubber as rayon could save, and in some instances more.

Next, the question of satisfactory performance of tires made of this new cotton cord was raised. From tests made by the Motor Transport Corps, it is apparent that the Corps is thoroughly convinced that these tires perform as well as or better than conventional tires, and the position questioning the performance of cotton cord had to be abandoned just as the contention of rubber saving was abandoned.

The question was then raised that since synthetic rubber generates more heat than crude rubber, rayon might be necessary on this account. Preliminary tests indicate that this objection to cotton tire cord is as fallacious as were the two other contentions which preceded it. Final and exhaustive tests of synthetic tires made with rayon and with cotton cords are now in progress by the Motor Transport Corps, and the answer will be known in six weeks or less.

The rayon expansion program has been under consideration for many months without any action being taken. If this program is put into effect now, and the results of the tests now under way should, six weeks hence, confirm all present indications that the program is not of value to the war effort, then the critical materials and substantial man hours involved in the expansion will have been diverted from essential production to no avail, and serious and permanent injury will have been done unnecessarily to the cotton industry.

Cotton cords in quantity and quality necessary by all indications are available now, whereas a period of approximately nine months will be required to make rayon cords available under the expansion program. We therefore are urging the War Production Board to have this program held in abeyance for the brief period necessary to obtain the results of the complete test mentioned in the foregoing.

I have written Mr. Donald M. Nelson, Chairman of WPB, about this matter and feel that it should also be brought to the attention of you and your associates in the Southern Governors Conference, because of its possible serious and far-reaching adverse effect upon our Southern economy.

Very truly yours,

Oscar Johnston

WE, THE GOVERNORS . . .

believe that National welfare is served by publishing the letter, reproduced here, from the National Cotton Council of America.

Displacement of cotton in its largest single use—that is, as cord in tires—is a matter of the gravest concern and should be contemplated only in the event that the most exhaustive tests prove, beyond any shadow of doubt, that such a move is necessary to the War Effort.

Since, as pointed out by the National Cotton Council, the results of tests by Motor Transport Corps as to the relative merits of cotton and rayon cords will be available within six weeks, we respectfully submit that the project for tremendous expansion of production facilities for rayon to displace cotton in its largest field of consumption should be held in abeyance until the results of the Motor Transport Corps tests are known.

We are reliably informed that cotton cords are regularly being produced, which in performance with natural rubber and in tests with synthetic rubber, match or excel rayon cords. We are informed that there is an ample supply of cotton and sufficient machinery in place to meet entirely the Nation's requirements for tire cord.

In view of the above together with the facts presented by the National Cotton Council, the Southern Governors' Conference believes that the War Effort will best be served by a full and complete investigation of the matter to bring out all the facts.

Rome-Berlin Rift Reported Growing Wider

By the Associated Press

London, Oct. 14.—Reports of a widening rift between Germany and Italy came from neutral capitals today as Hitler's Gestapo strongarm chief, Heinrich Himmler, visited Rome and conferred at length with Mussolini.

Reports which filtered out of the Axis camp indicated strongly that Germany has grown increasingly suspicious of her junior partner's attitude toward the United States.

This distrust was Italy's permission for the landing of Myron C. Taylor's plane in Rome, facilitating his recent visit to the Vatican; and by announcement that after October 19 the 600,000 Italians in the United States no longer would be restricted as enemy aliens.

Copies of United States Attorney General Biddle's address announcing the decision were dropped in Italy and were expected to have "tremendous effect."

The Berlin radio broadcast that Himmler "has been received by Il Duce, with whom he had a lengthy and cordial conference."

Reports of strained relations between Berlin and Rome suggested that, more likely, Mussolini was on the carpet.

The Basel National Zeitung's Istanbul correspondent reported rumors in Turkey that Hitler probably would take time soon for a personal conference with Mussolini.

From Ankara there were reports that Italy's failure to cope with continued anti-Axis outbreaks in dismembered Yugoslavia also was a cause of German dissatisfaction, and that Germany might take over control of Slovenia and Croatia, and possibly demand full control of the Adriatic port of Trieste as well. Italy got Trieste from Austria as a prize of the first World War.

Agency Sees No Shoe Dearth

The Commerce Department booted another war-born rumor out the window yesterday with a statement that there is no sign of any shortage of leatner shoes.

As a matter of fact, the announcement said, shoe production has been outrunning sales this year and 1942 is likely to close "with substantial retail inventories."

And all this despite the fact that Americans have about 50 million brand-new pairs kicking around in their closets—bought because of "rumored shortages."

The department pointed out that while no rationing should be necessary "excessive hoarding of any commodity could very readily bring about a situation which would force strict rationing even if supplies were above actual needs."

Conducting a survey to lay "erroneous reports that there is an insufficiency of leather shoes and that strict rationing would be necessary in the immediate future," The Department said it found that more than 207 million pairs of shoes were in the hands of retailers last July 1, in spite of the hoarding.

U. S. Must Look Beyond War, Democrats Say

Calling next month's congressional elections the most important in history, the Democratic National Committee says the party's control of Congress must be maintained and strengthened to prosecute the war under "a full head of steam."

The committee charged in a "Democratic Campaign Book of 1942," just issued for campaign speakers, that the Republicans, Lodge and Watson, "wrecked" the Wilsonian League of Nations and said the country must guard against a repetition of the kind of peace that followed the last war.

"Our first job is to win the war, but we must look forward beyond that," says the book. "We won another war a generation ago, and our then President sought a peace that would terminate the recurring threat of other wars. But domestic politics intervened. Woodrow Wilson was an international hero; it was deemed necessary by his domestic foes to break down that prestige."

Republicans this year are distributing to State chairmen and candidates copies of the 10-point declaration of policies and principles recently adopted by House Republicans. This declaration recognized that the United States had a responsibility to work with other nations to bring about a "world understanding and cooperative peace."

The Democratic pamphlet, entitled "Stand by the President," lists the votes by which the House passed various defense measures before Pearl Harbor and says:

"No matter what individual or group exceptions there may have been, the fact remains that it was predominant Democratic action which must be given credit of putting through the various vital programs."

"There is no contention that American patriotism is confined to Democrats," it says. "The visible evidence of this Administration's conception that our party has no monopoly of loyalty is that two of the outstanding Republican leaders have been given command of the two great defense departments of the Government and that in the key positions of production, distribution, etc., the great figures of industry, regardless of politics, have been placed."

Film Cutter 25 Years

Hollywood, Calif. (U.P.).—Mrs. Hannah Dennis, head film cutter of Universal Studios, probably has cut short—or shorter—the film careers of more stars than any other person in the world. She recently celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of her holding down that job. During the quarter of a century in which she unquestionably left more disillusioned heads of movie or would-be-movie stars on the cutting room floor than anyone else, she has snipped 1875 feature-length attractions. She has the longest existing record for service in that capacity.

Legislative Threat

Pressure Put On Small War Plant Agency

By the Associated Press

Drastic action in the House to force wider distribution of war contracts among smaller manufacturers was threatened yesterday by a trio of New York Representatives.

Telling the Senate Small Business Committee that the Smaller War Plants Corp. needed "extreme prodding," Representative Celler (Democrat) of New York said:

"We mean this as a threat. If we don't get action, we are going to take drastic steps."

Celler's complaint against inactivity was echoed by Representatives Keogh (Democrat) of New York and Lynch (Democrat) of New York.

Meanwhile, Col. Robert W. Johnson, chief of the Army's New York ordnance district, told the committee that from 70 to 85 per cent of the war contracts which cleared his office came in already earmarked for distribution to certain contractors.

"You would be in a much better position than Washington to determine whether contracts could be given to idle plants without piling up a backlog of orders in others," Chairman Murray (Democrat) of Montana, commented.

"I think most district officers are equipped to perform that function," Colonel Johnson agreed.

Celler complained that when the War Department sought sporting goods for its troops, "all the sporting goods were purchased from one or two concerns."

Many established New York concerns were ignored, he added, when the Agricultural Marketing Administration and the Interior Department's Division of Insular Affairs spent 15 million dollars for foods, medicines and clothing for shipment to Puerto Rico recently.

Keogh said administrative approaches would have to be improved and Lynch declared the Chemical Warfare Service was the only division doing its best job.

"We are frankly disappointed that the Smaller War Plants Corp. doesn't yet have an office in New York," Lynch said.

Cleric Sees Confidence in Deity as Requisite of Durable Peace

By the Associated Press

Louisville, Ky., Oct. 14.—Christians must gain confidence in the "hidden things of God" to win strong confidence in the coming peace, Dr. Frederick H. Knubel, New York, president of the United Lutheran Church in America, told delegates attending the thirteenth biennial convention tonight.

"To listen to cocksure prophets predicting peace near at hand or to the confusion of voices describing the peace that must come with the church in a seat at the peace table is to fail to gain that confidence."

Dr. Knubel called upon the United Lutheran Church to establish a new front of worship "with every congregation regimented with a drill of daily worship and personal, family and public devotions deepening the assurance of the hidden things in the world."

Gov. Prentice Cooper of Tennessee will speak at a banquet tomorrow night.

Delegates heard with approval a report that the American Lutheran Church at its seventh biennial convention at Mendota, Ill., unanimously declared readiness today to establish pulpit and altar fellowship with either or both of the two largest Lutheran bodies in the country, the United Lutheran Church and the Missouri Synod.

Through pulpit and altar fellowship, pastors of the three branches of the church could exchange pulpits with one another and members of the laity could partake of the Lord's Supper at altars of any of the affiliated churches.

Davis Urges Cut In Luxury Buying

Sense of Propriety Will Help Restrict Purchases, He Says

Luxury buying in this country must be cut to the bone and supplanted by War Bond purchases if the armed forces are to get the complete support they need for victory, Elmer Davis, director of the Office of War Information, declared yesterday at a luncheon of the District of Columbia War Savings Committee in the Mayflower Hotel. H. L. Rust, jr., chairman of the committee, presided.

"Civilian purchases necessarily will have to be confined to essentials in the very near future," he asserted. "A sense of propriety should help in rationing this nonessential buying."

He told those assembled that some people had dismissed money as nothing more than a convenient method of counting. "Even so," he declared, "the United States Government is in dire need of all the money it can get from the citizens of this country.

Only One Investment

"I hope that every American believes, as I do, that there is only one truly important investment today, and that is in United States War Securities.

"Washingtonians have been doing a considerable part in investing in war bonds and stamps . . . and I am sure that it will not take a bombing by the enemy to convince many of the necessity of cooperating with the Government."

He pointed out that although 20 million persons in this country have been buying the war securities, Hawaii and Alaska were, proportionately, buying four times as much.

Has Faith in Army

"I have no fear that this city will be bombed or that we will not emerge victorious from this battle," he said, "for I have great faith in our Army."

Also present at the meeting were Eugene Meyer, editor and publisher of The Post; Harold N. Graves, Assistant to the Secretary of the Treasury; Eugene W. Sloan, executive director of the War Bond campaign; Vincent C. Burke, Postmaster of the District, and Peter Odegard, also Assistant to Secretary Morgenthau.

For War Fund

Symphony Orchestra Benefit Nov. 3

Hans Kindler will conduct the Washington Symphony Orchestra in a performance for the benefit of the Community War Fund, at Constitution Hall, November 3, it was announced yesterday.

The DAR has contributed the use of the hall and the orchestra is giving its services free in order that all of the money received from tickets may go to the fund with the exception of the Federal tax.

The program will be featured by Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, the Victory Symphony. Tickets will go on sale at Kitts Music Store, 1330 G Street Northwest, on Monday. Popular prices will prevail with some box seats being sold at a premium in order to swell the fund.

Excellent entertainment talent for the Community War Fund Fair, which will be opened next Thursday, has been secured, Bruce R. Allen, general chairman said. The Fair will be held at Uline's Arena and will be free to the public.

Allen said they were obtaining the services of some top-flight professional as well as amateur entertainers.

Committees to serve as host and to further promotion have been appointed by officials, Thomas P. Morgan, jr., and Hardie Meakin.

Federal workers who have volunteered their services in the drive to solicit contributions from Government employes, will meet Friday at 3:30 p. m. in the Interdepartmental Auditorium, between Twelfth and Fourteenth Streets, on Constitution Avenue in preparation for their task.

The drive among Government workers is under the direction of Oscar L. Chapman.

Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, former minister to Norway, will tell of the dire need of citizens on foreign war fronts who will benefit from some of the agencies in the fund. John L. Sullivan, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury; Mrs. Jesse Jones, Mrs. Claud Wickard, and Mrs. Harold Ickes also will appear on the platform.

Victory Plate Luncheon Today May Be Model

Highlighting the forthcoming Nation-wide program to "stretch" the meals of America, the first "Victory Plate" luncheon in Washington will be given today at noon at Epiphany Church, G and Thirteenth Streets Northwest. It will be attended by representatives of the 60 agencies in the District which form a coordinating committee working on local nutrition problems.

Donald S. Payne, senior technologist in the Department of Agriculture, will speak on "Nutritious Soup Stocks."

Other speakers will include Miss Elinor Enright, nutrition consultant, Regional Office of Defense Health and Welfare Services of the Federal Security Agency, and Dr. Robert S. Goodhart, technical adviser on industrial nutrition.

The menu is in charge of Mrs. Thomas P. Mitchell, who predicts that her "meat stretcher" dish will form the basis of part of a forthcoming emergency diet.

Heavier Fighting Develops in Stanley Range

General MacArthur's Headquarters, Australia (Thursday), Oct. 15 (AP).—Heaver fighting has developed in the Owen Stanley Mountains, where Australian troops are driving toward the north shore of New Guinea, an Allied communique said today.

The increased action, amid the jungle-covered peaks north of Myola, was accompanied by air attacks in the Wairopi area, behind the Japanese front lines, and against Lae, an enemy shore base 150 miles northwest of the principal fighting.

The latter took place, the communique said, in the vicinity of Templeton's Crossing, marking a further advance by General MacArthur's troops.

Voice of Church

Presbytery Urges Curb On Vice Here

Legislative action to curb prostitution in the District was urged yesterday by the Washington City Presbytery, representing 16,000 communicants of the Presbyterian Church, United States of America, in the District, Maryland and Virginia.

Following adoption of resolutions Monday, the Presbytery officials, through Stated Clerk Irving W. Ketchum, sent telegrams to District committee chairmen in the House and Senate and to the Federation of churches, advising them of the action taken.

The prestbytery "takes decisive action to make known its desire to eliminate the practice of prostitution in the District of Columbia and earnestly urges that constructive and proper efforts be made to accomplish this end," said the telegram, in part.

Asked what action the federation contemplates in the matter, Dr. Frederick E. Reissig federation executive secretary, said last night that the issue would be referred to the federation's civic affairs committee, headed by Wilbur J. LaRoe, jr., prominent lawyer and layman of Chevy Chase Presbyterian Church. Thus, a resolution similar to the presbytery's, may be forthcoming soon from the federation.

Australian Radio Reports Big Jap Fleet Southbound

General MacArthur's Headquarters, Australia, Oct. 14 (U.P.).—A Japanese fleet, including seven battleships, four aircraft carriers and a number of cruisers has been sighted heading south in the Pacific, the Australian radio asserted today. It did not say when or where the fleet was seen.

Observers believed the fleet might be intended to reinforce the Japanese in the Solomon Islands or to strike a new blow at New Guinea or Australia.

Reopening of Gas Rate Case Urged

Incensed at what members of the Fort Davis Citizens Association characterize as "the high-handed manner of conducting hearings," members of that organization are requesting a court appeal and a reopening of the case against the Washington Gas Light Co., which was granted an increase in rates two weeks ago by the Public Utilities Commission.

In forming their complaint, members of the Fort Davis Citizens Association charged the commission of being "unsympathetic with the efforts of the Administration to hold down the cost of living."

D. C. Grocer Shot by Gunman Dies of Wounds

Shot in the abdomen by a Negro gunman in a holdup attempt last Sunday night, Harry Kline, 47-year-old grocer, died at Casualty Hospital at 6 a.m. yesterday.

His death added another major crime to the list of local offenses which has grown materially during the last few months.

Detectives of the homicide and robbery squads were working together in an effort to find Kline's slayer, a man believed involved in two other recent robberies. A woman shopkeeper was shot in one of the holdups.

Kline was alone in his grocery store at 1038 Fifth Street Northeast last Sunday night when the gunman entered. He asked for a can of beans, it was said, and when the storekeeper returned from a shelf, the man produced a gun.

The victim put up his hands and made a remark, it was reported, and then the bandit fired three shots. Two struck Kline.

Mrs. Sarah Kline, Kline's wife, was in the family apartment above the store when the shots were fired. Her husband was unconscious on the floor of the empty store when she got downstairs.

An emergency operation was performed at Casualty Hospital, but Kline failed to recover. He was unable to furnish police with any definite information about his assailant.

His meager description, police reported, tallies somewhat with the man who shot Mrs. Rose Ehrlich in an attempted holdup at 1026 North Capitol Street, September 9.

The robbery of a real estate office at 1625 North Capitol Street, September 25, was staged by a man with a patch on his face. More than $200 was taken in this robbery.

Both these crimes remain unsolved as do the $19,000 theft of uncut diamonds from the Kahn Jewelry Co., 903 F Street Northwest, September 17; two holdups of Hot Shoppe Restaurants in September, and the fatal shooting of Robert Hamner, 21-year-old soldier.

A total of 99 robberies, including pocketbook snatchings, armed holdups, yoke jobs and safe crackings have been reported since September 1. Of this number 31 have been cleared up by police.

Funeral services for Kline will be held at 2 p. m. today at Danzansky's Funeral Home, 3501 Fourteenth Street Northwest. He will be buried in the Workmen's Circle Cemetery in Deanwood, D. C.

Besides his wife he is survived by two daughters, Lillian, 17, and Beatrice, 11.

Threat Seen To Hospitals

St. Louis, Oct. 14 (AP).—Hospitals supported by community contributions rather than by tax funds are "in danger of losing their place in this civilization" and of becoming Government-controlled, R. F. Cahalane, executive director of the Massachusetts Hospital Service, today told the American Hospital Association.

"We do not frown on governmental help in caring for the various public-assistance groups but I think we should do the job in our own way as we have in the past when at all possible," he added.

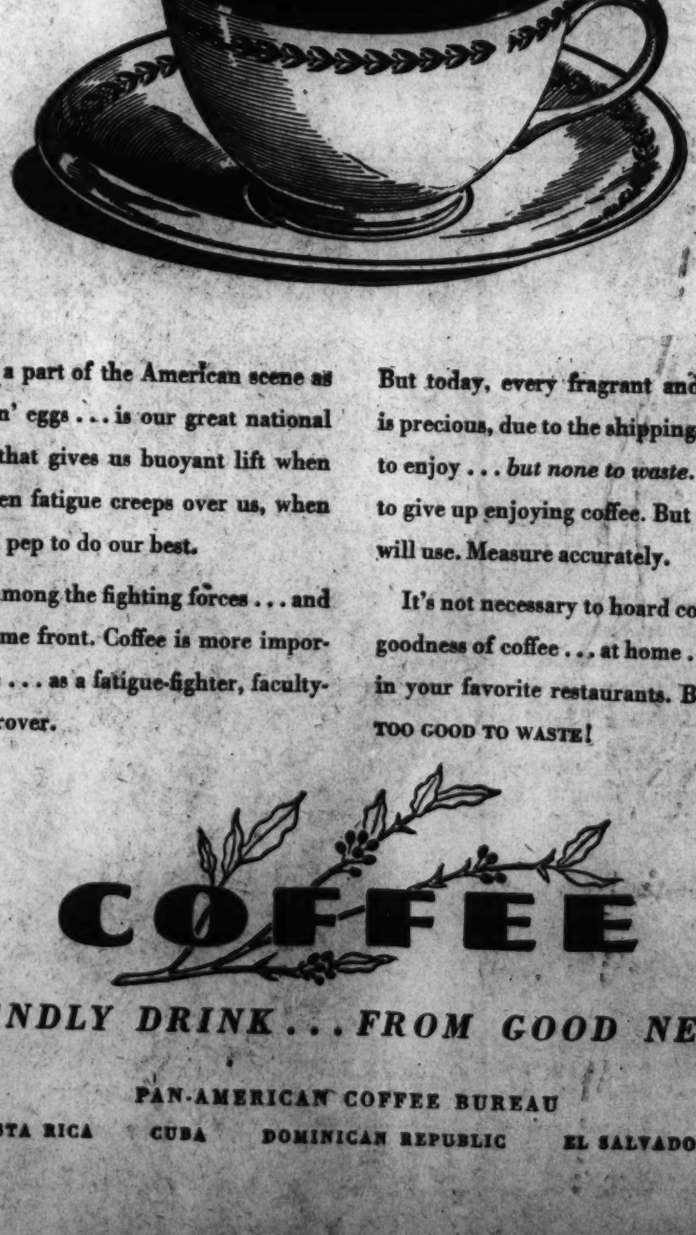
TOO GOOD TO WASTE!



COFFEE . . . as much a part of the American scene as apple pie and ham 'n' eggs . . . is our great national beverage. It's the drink that gives us buoyant lift when the going gets tough, when fatigue creeps over us, when we need extra energy and pep to do our best.

It's the favorite drink among the fighting forces . . . and among fighters on the home front. Coffee is more important than ever in wartime . . . as a fatigue-fighter, faculty-sharpener, efficiency-improver.

But today, every fragrant and satisfying drop of coffee is precious, due to the shipping situation. There is enough to enjoy . . . but none to waste. Don't think that you have to give up enjoying coffee. But don't make more than you will use. Measure accurately.

It's not necessary to hoard coffee. Keep on enjoying the goodness of coffee . . . at home . . . on trains and planes . . . in your favorite restaurants. But don't waste coffee! It's TOO GOOD TO WASTE!

Sasscer Hits Methods of Seizing Land

Representative Sasscer (Democrat) of Maryland yesterday severely criticized the War Department's methods in taking up land in Prince Georges County for the Camp Springs-Meadows Army Airport.

Sasscer said that properties were being condemned and seized almost overnight, giving owners little or no time to relocate, when actually advance warning could easily have been given.

As a result, he declared, "an undue hardship is being worked upon them."

Moreover, he protested that when ousted property owners sought priorities from the War Production Board in order to re-establish themselves, these were often denied.

People Anxious

"For nearly a year," he told the House, "surveying parties have appeared from time to time in the area of the Camp Springs-Meadows airport. When the people of the Camp Springs area became anxious as to what these surveys meant, I, on several occasions, attempted to ascertain whether or not the land would be taken, in order that the people affected might be able to make proper plans for readjustment. They were told and I was told that nothing definite had been decided. On one occasion, I was told in substance that the presence of the surveying parties had no definite significance, as various sites were being surveyed from which some selections could be made.

"Then at Camp Springs, without any advance notice whatsoever, declarations of taking, coupled with a notification to move within 20 days, were served upon the people in an area embracing 3000 acres of land. Practically overnight tractors were sent in, bulldozer machines began rolling, leveling off the grounds, and the dismantling of buildings started."

It was apparent, he charged, that the War Department had known months in advance that the action was to be taken, and that "much unnecessary hardship could have been avoided" if adequate notice had been given.

Ills Reason Given

"The reason that has been given," he continued, "for taking properties without adequate notice is that if the notice were given, real estate speculators would move in. There is no force to this reason, as the Government has its powers of condemnation with equal force as to real estate speculators."

He also urged that in future dealings, the WPB cooperate with the evacuees in the matter of priorities rather than hold to its present policy which he said denied any "moral obligation" to aid those whose property had been taken by another Federal agency.

Details of Drive Will Be Mapped At Session Today

With representatives of Washington's industries and business corporations promising 100 per cent cooperation, final details of the city's "heavy scrap blitz" will be concluded this morning at 9 o'clock in the office of Col. J. B. Arthur, Jr., assistant engineer commissioner.

Horace Walker, executive secretary of the District Salvage Committee, said yesterday the drive will start October 22, will last a week and that there will be one main salvage depot for all scrap collected and donated.

A check of the District's larger business firms revealed a great variety of scrap metal now awaiting the opening of the drive. In many instances, corporations and business houses have made determined efforts to unearth large piles of salvageable metal, while others pledged themselves to carry on long-range salvage programs in a renewed effort to turn up scrap hitherto undiscovered in city gas and electric works, heavy machinery installations, and the like.

Much Heavy Equipment

Representatives of contractors and large building operators stated that any worn out concrete mixers, power shovels and drag lines no longer in use, and useless refrigerators, radiators, old pipe and partitions in buildings would be donated.

Firms in the printing business promised to turn in worn-out equipment such as presses, developing plates, lead and metal type, addressograph plates, staplers, type stands and composing sticks and tools.

Department stores promised rusted out boilers and pipes, discarded plumbing apparatus and bodies of wrecked trucks and automobiles.

The owner of one hardware store, who already has three truck loads of scrap, said that in his opinion the hardware merchants would turn in such items as iron and steel brackets, defective and returned hand garden tools, and metal display stands originally used for showing merchandise.

From the gas and electric utility companies will come such items as steel and iron piping, broken down machinery of all descriptions, copper, brass, lead and zinc from old installations and all odds and ends left over from new installations.

An electric locomotive crane was promised by an official of the Potomac Electric Power Co., along with lead cable electric fans, manhole covers, transformers, meters, electric machine and auto parts and old batteries. Officials of both the gas and electric utilities pledged their companies' support in discovering long forgotten items of heavy scrap metal buried in the city's vast system of underground installations.

In most cases, Walker said, the firms and business houses will transport their own scrap, but if a load proves too heavy for available facilities, the District Salvage Committee will arrange to haul it through one of the junk dealers of the District.

Party Switch Advice Brings Denunciation

Edgar G. Brown, director of the National Negro Council here, was roundly berated in the House yesterday for a recent statement to the press in which he urged American Negroes to transfer their allegiance from the New Deal to the Republicans.

Representative Mitchell (Democrat) of Illinois, sole Negro member of the House, charged that Brown is "nothing but a super confidence man" and said that he was advising his race against their best interests in telling them to vote Republican.

"The New Deal has done wonders for the Negro," he declared. "Under this Administration, the Negro has received the highest advantages and opportunities."

Brown last week had urged that colored people desert the Roosevelt Administration because of its failure to include an antiracial discrimination clause in the recently-enacted price stabilization law. He charged that the Administration was yielding too much to the viewpoints of Southern Democrats.

Mitchell accused him of being a "member of that group which has been responsible for much of the misunderstanding between races," and particularly took him to task for making a "most false, most vicious and most unfair attack" upon Stabilization Director James F. Byrnes.

Brown at once issued a statement in reply in which he countered that "what the Negroes of Illinois think of Congressman Mitchell is best evidenced by his choosing not to run again this year."

Service Organized in Capital To Keep Track of Raid Victims

CASUALTY INFORMATION—Mrs. Theodore Wedel (left) and Elizabeth Houghton are assistant director and director, respectively, of the new Casualty Information Service set up at District Civilian Defense headquarters

Organization of a casualty information service to keep track of civilians "in the event of an attack upon the metropolitan area" was announced yesterday by Commissioner John Russell Young, coordinator of civilian defense for Washington.

Miss Elizabeth Houghton, 3003 Massachusetts Avenue Northwest, will direct the service which Commissioner Young said will meet "one of the most serious problems for which civilian defense must plan."

Miss Houghton said that while the plan cannot eliminate the suffering of a bereaved or separated family, prompt and accurate information about missing persons can do much to alleviate anxiety, allay panic and maintain civilian morale.

Public libraries will be the central points at which the public may make inquiries about missing persons. "If and as needed other inquiry points will be established," Miss Houghton said.

The American Red Cross has assumed responsibility for the inquiry division and has named Mrs. G. Howland Chase, 1555 Thirty-fifth Street Northwest, as chairman. Mrs. Chase's committee is also making special arrangements to handle the thousands of inquiries which would pour into Washington from every part of the world if the city were bombed, she said yesterday.

The registration division of the service is being organized under the direction of Mrs. H. G. Torbert, Jr., 2805 Q Street Northwest, and will be responsible for listing not only all casualties but for listing also those who have been forced to leave their homes. These registrations will be taken at more than 350 places in Washington—at hospitals, casualty stations, billet posts, civilian war air shelters and morgues. Each individual who enters any one of these will be registered and his card sent by messenger to the central file where the information will be assembled so it can be obtained quickly by the inquiry division.

The central file for the service is being organized by Mrs. M. F. C. Leuta, driector of the Social Service Exchange. Other appointments announced yesterday by Commissioner Young included those of Mrs. T. O. Wedel as assistant C. I. S. director; Mrs. Milton King, liaison officer for the metropolitan area, and Mrs. Daivd Baer and Miss Bertha Israel, property officers.

Transportation Study Unit May Be Set Up

The possibility of setting up a special subcommittee to study transportation problems in the District will be considered at a meeting of the Senate District Committee at 10:30 a. m. today.

Three local bills are also slated for study at the session, including a measure to suspend the city's 8-hour working day law for women employed at the Union Station and bus terminals for the duration.

The other pieces of legislation to be acted upon are designed to better Administrative procedure in two departments of the local government. One speeds up the methods of condemning unsanitary buildings in Washington, while the other trims and improves casualty and fire insurance regulations.

Those injured were Sigfried Blau, 21, of 3642 Highwood Drive Southeast, Hannah Rubins, 19, 2715 Woodley Place Northwest, and Robert Kobre, 24, 643 Pennsylvania Avenue Southeast.

The Compleat Angler

Talking about the waste of manpower, a classic example is furnished in the unofficial disclosure that the Department of Justice, through its antitrust division, has decided to "investigate" the transportation industry. Perhaps the time that would thus be used by the antitrust division may not be particularly valuable. We would not, however, do Mr. Arnold's agency an injustice by so saying, for it is a matter of record that it works hard and well for the community. Yet by this announcement the division is actually advertising that it has idle time on its hands. Certainly that is not the case with the railroads, motor carriers, waterways and the air lines which are all said to be involved in this investigation.

Maybe there are specific abuses back of the department's mind in undertaking the inquiry. But they have not yet been mentioned. All that the public knows is that nine grand juries in nine cities are to be asked to probe the entire history of the transportation industry since 1920. Is Mr. Arnold merely hopeful that he might unearth an abuse that will make the investigation worth while? It looks like it. For, on top of this statement, there is the unofficial announcement that the investigation is "prompted by reports of transportation congestion and delay involving the war effort." So it would appear that Mr. Arnold's quest has what the poet calls an "ancient and fish-like smell." That is to say, it is a fishing expedition.

A fishing expedition may be necessary in the piping days of peace. But in these sterner times it is an intolerable luxury and waste of time. Surely there is congestion and delay in our transportation. But that it is due to some abuses in operation which are contrary to law is a theory that would not occur to anybody but a lawyer. "Everything," it has been said, "is bilious to a lawyer." To the plain man the explanation of the congestion and delay is plain enough in the enormous requirements of the war.

The plain man, likewise, will be bewildered at the lack of sense of proportion in the department which this disclosure demonstrates. Obviously the way to intensify the present congestion and delay on our carriers is to go on with this investigation. In that event key men who are already overstrained in attending to our war needs would be taken away from their key jobs for seemingly endless work in preparing cases and answering questions. Common sense would suggest, therefore, that Mr. Arnold file away his docket. It is the country more than the carriers which cannot afford such a mammoth investigation as he appears to have in mind.

Innocent Abroad

For several years there have been rumors about the funds which the more foresighted of the Nazi hierarchs are supposed to have salted away in different parts of the world as a kind of insurance against the collapse of the New Order. Evidently these reports have been current even in Germany itself. For in his recent Sportspalast speech Goering referred to them in a tone of aggrieved innocence. If, he said, there is any truth in these reports, why aren't his accusers more specific? Why don't they give the names of the alleged banks and the amounts of the alleged investments or deposits?

Within less than a week the British radio was supplying Germany and the rest of Europe with all the details which Herr Goering had demanded. The marshal, it seems, has about eight million dollars cached in various places outside Germany. Some of it is right here in the United States; for example, holdings of about $750,000 in bonds of the Pennsylvania Railroad, the Illinois Central, Bethlehem Steel, Cities Service. Another $600,000 in bonds of the Montecatini and Royal Dutch companies is said to be on deposit in the Sumitomo (Jap) Bank of San Francisco.

Of course, it is now doubtful whether the marshal will ever be able to cash in any of these holdings. He will likewise encounter some difficulty in withdrawing any of his $1,250,000 in cash in the Sao Paolo Safe Deposit Bank in Brazil. Evidently these were historical contingencies that Herr Goering and his investment counselors were unable to foresee. But, after writing these off, there remains a tidy matter of about five million dollars in currency deposits in banks in Switzerland and Sweden—not a great fortune, perhaps, for one who has been accustomed to living regally on the loot of Europe, but, with a bit of pinching here and there, it can be made to do. Besides, there is the villa near Stockholm, held in the name of Frau von Wilamowitz-Moellendorf, Goering's sister-in-law. All in all, Herr Goering's provisions for the rainy day seem quite in accord with the principles of diversified investment as expounded in our "decadent pluto-democracies."

What Next In India

The riots and the suppression of those riots in India are reported to be widening the gulf between the British government and the Indian people. In normal times such a result would be merely a problem for the British Commonwealth. But the issue nowadays involves the United Nations. Both our war and our peace aims meet an acid test in India. If India falls to the Japanese invader, then that object of our strategy which consists of keeping the Japanese and the Germans separated might be frustrated. If India does not get her freedom, then this war of freedom which we are waging would be a fraud and a delusion. Americans realize these implications of the trouble in India. And that is why the disturbance in that great subcontinent has created and will continue to create profound misgivings in this country.

The surety of Indian freedom after the war is given in the plan offered by Sir Stafford Cripps. Though the plan was rejected by the Indians—because more concessions were not made immediately—nevertheless it will be implemented as soon as the war comes to an end. What is less certain is the security of India from Japanese aggression.

Now it stands to reason that in India it would be the people more than the army who would be the true bulwark against Japanese aggression. Are they prepared to resist the Japanese? There can be no question, according to returning travelers, that psychologically the Indian people are so prepared. They are not so lost to common sense as to want to embrace the slavery which the Japanese would fasten upon them. It is precisely a fear of the Japanese that, by a seeming contradiction, persuaded many Indians to lend an ear to Gandhi's anti-British agitation. For they do not feel any faith in the readiness of the British to protect India as they would protect the United Kingdom. What happened in Malaya and in Burma happened next door to India. India saw delaying actions, retreats, abandonment. Is it any wonder that many of the Indian people are troubled that the British would do the same if the Japanese brought the war to India? Not at all. And Mahatma Gandhi has been playing upon this lack of trust in military Britain. This was shown in his last remark before being taken into custody, "We have to envisage the possibility of their abandoning us."

India's fears should have been removed before the British began to suppress the civil disobedience movement and arrest the ringleaders. And for a very simple reason. If the Indian people feel that they will not be protected, they must likewise feel that the British have no right to insist upon retaining the responsibilities for defense and foreign affairs which, under the Cripps plan, would be retained pending the postwar grant of complete freedom. The reassuring word is as easy to say as it was in Egypt. But, of course, it must be accompanied by deeds. Calcutta, for instance, is the second largest city in the British Commonwealth, with three million souls. If there were more evidence in this great city of, say, antiaircraft defense, if there were demonstrations of preparedness in the shape of practice raids, then the British would be going a long way to remove the gnawing suspicions which are said to be evident throughout India.

A constructive approach to the new problem of India created by the civil disturbance requires something more than British or indeed United Nations assurances of all-out protection. This would not in itself produce a wartime settlement—pending the grant of complete freedom—between the British and India. Such a settlement requires a recognition by the British that mediation might very well be helpful in taking the poison out of the present atmosphere.

It is unfortunate in this connection that "last words" have been said on the Cripps proposals and that in London the gate seems to have shut against further negotiations. As William Jennings Bryan once said, there can be "no last word between friends." Realism no less than magnanimity calls for less intransigence. For, as we have said, our common destinies hang on too fine a thread to permit this soft spot of India to deteriorate any further. If this is recognizably an "all-for-one-and-one-for-all" war, as it is, the British should therefore admit the principle of third-party interest in a wartime settlement with India. And, as to this, the natural mediators in the dispute between Britain and India are, of course, America and China. There would be no question in either India or Britain of the honesty of such conciliators.

Yet it is foolish for the Indians to expect either any British effort to explore a wartime settlement or press for such a new effort in either America or China till the commotion in India has been ended. In the present exigencies of this war neither America nor China could possibly take exception to the necessity under which Britain is put in India to quell violence. For those riots are helpful to the enemy of the United Nations. Indeed, some of the acts now reported look as if they have been perpetrated by elements friendly to Japan. That, at any rate, is the testimony of T. A. Raman, former London editor of the United Press of India, who has just returned from India. The very nature of the present outbreak, as he says, is utterly foreign to authentic Gandhism. Hitherto Gandhi has insisted that nonviolence—which is the heart of his disobedience movements—can be maintained only by the breaking of one law. In the present disturbance, however, the appeal was to general lawlessness, which, as he himself once foretold, is a betrayal of nonviolence.

It would be well for India sympathizers in our country to realize these facts. We should be endangering the common victory if we questioned the British attitude that order must be maintained in India. And we should be compounding that danger if we permitted the Indian problem to become a source of dissension between Great Britain and the United States. Those in charge of our foreign relations, we make bold to say, are much too sensible to permit any such development. It is to be hoped Americans in general will be equally sensible. Only as the violence is put down could the way be opened for a further exploration of a wartime settlement in the presence of the United States and China.

Army Goal

The air will be cleared considerably by Secretary Stimson's data on the Army goal on manpower which he gave yesterday before the House Military Affairs Committee. He put the Army's manpower needs for 1943 at 7½ millions. Already there are 4¾ million men under arms. There are about two million men in the 'teen-age bracket who, according to present indications, will be in uniform by the end of 1943. That would put the Army call upon the rest of the population at 1¼ millions. It is for this kind of elucidation that our supply and manpower officials have long been pleading. There could be no working out of an overall manpower policy—the need for which the President on Monday said was "formidable"—till the needs of the fighting services had become known. There could be no systematic production policy. There could not even be a common strategy with our Allies. Moreover, the lack of such data as Mr. Stimson has now given has had the effect of bewildering the American people. All they have heard is estimates of the wildest and most improbable kind, coupled with hints that the draft from now on will proceed at a "superhuman" rate.

Thus the Secretary of War has done a useful service in telling the country the goal at which the Army is aiming. Whether the figure will give us a mass Army or merely a large Army is an idle question. The fact is that, even at Secretary Stimson's figure, it is a bigger Army than most people had envisaged when we were plunged into war. And the necessity for it will doubtless be disputed by those who believe in highly mobile and professional armies. But this argument we may pass over. What is of far more concern is the rate of induction of the new Army—because the rate of induction has an intimate bearing on the whole strategy-supply complex. As we absorb more and more supplies for training purposes, we must deny supplies to the fighting fronts.

Our job in this war—the job of the United Nations in common—is to bring to bear upon our common enemies the maximum impact at the earliest possible time. That is obvious. What is equally obvious is that in the fluctuating tempo of this war a speedy and decisive victory will depend upon the observance of deadlines. A new deadline has been attained by the failure of Hitler to get Stalingrad. It is failure piled on failure. Even a typewriter strategist can see the monumental blunder that Hitler has made in yielding to the temptation of easy gains instead of forcing a military decision in the west. He postponed that decision. And the easy gains are still dangling out of reach like the grapes of Tantalus. He has thus left himself wide open to the assumption of the offensive by the United Nations. The deadline for the stroke of the moment, in other words, may have been brought much nearer than many people imagined when Hitler began to batter at the gates of Stalingrad.

These considerations, it seems to us, should dominate our strategical thinking and by the same token our supply planning. If the rate of induction prohibits the bringing to bear upon Hitler of a maximum impact, then it should be staggered or slowed down. Thus our problem is one of balance against time. Wherever there is a fighting need at this moment, there should be competition* to supply it, not a competition to get the other fellow to. This is a war of coalition in which the saving of all we hold dear probably depends as much upon a speedy victory as upon victory. "Even a defective plan boldly and resolutely carried out," says Field Service Regulations, "is far better than the hesitating search for the ideal." Secretary Stimson has now provided some basic data upon which our strategists and planners can go to work in mobilizing our striking power.

This rock beside our pool
Shall be warm;
Now it is cool.

Tomorrow sometime, you can sprawl upon it,
Your head in your arm,
Your fingers in the water
Feet on a bough;
Not now.

We have been mortal, you and I,
Too mortal, too savage,
Searching for the spring;
We more than others should have known
What breeds the half thawed earth,
The still damp stone.

On Probation

The writer read with interest The Post editorial, "War and Probation," of October 7, relative to the Federal Probation Service, with particular reference to inducting into the armed forces men with criminal records if they are morally fit for such service. It is gratifying to know that this is being done at this time when it is proposed to draft youths of 18 and married men with children.

The soldier of the Regular Army who may have been caught up by civilian authorities for some minor offense and given a short prison term is particularly unfortunate. He is discharged without honor from his regiment and cannot reenlist without special permission from the adjutant general, even though his Army record was good.

I know the case of a soldier, a boy of only 19, who, while befuddled with liquor, went joy riding for three or four squares in a borrowed auto, was arrested and given an indeterminate sentence of from eight months to two years. He is now eligible for parole and, even though the Parole Board wrote the adjutant general that it would grant him parole and suspend supervision over him for the period of his service in the armed forces, the adjutant general declined consent to the boy's reenlistment.

Such a policy of virtual blacklist might be defensible in times of peace, but with shortages of manpower becoming acute it merits the severest censure, especially when no moral turpitude is involved.

Cannot this situation be corrected, at least for the duration? Maybe the President should act, or the Military Affairs Committees of the House and Senate.

Questions Shortage

If this article, which appeared in the Salina Journal a few days ago is true, why are we told there is a manpower shortage? I quote:

"The reports of manpower shortage are as greatly exaggerated as that rumor of Mark Twain's death. This country still has men to burn. If it didn't have, it wouldn't be wasting several hundred thousand of them manicuring golf courses, standing in front of stores and apartment houses in cities to open taxicab doors, hovering about Hollywood executives to say "Yes, sir" at frequent intervals, and writing press-agent stories for various Federal agencies."

If articles of this nature are true, why do we take men off the farms and key men out of essential industries? Also, why are married men being taken especially with families? I am wondering if men in the Selective Service are trying to find out the facts and also if they have looked up the meaning of the word "efficiency?"

People are getting fed up with the conflicting stories in regard to the Selective Service program. Why does not somone straighten it out? It might be that the person who made the statement in my office the other day that "A few Kansas businessmen could straighten out most of the confusion in Washington" was not far from being right.

"Balkan Pot"

I have read with much interest the editorial entitled "Balkan Pot" in The Washington Post of October 11, 1942.

The conduct of the Bulgarians exemplifies the famous saying that "They have neither learned nor forgotten anything." Bulgarian policies in the last 30 years are a continuous series of aggressions and subsequent attempts to retrieve blunders. The treacherous attack of 1913 by Bulgaria against her allies, Serbia and Greece, and the punishment she got for it, was followed by the aggression of 1915 when Bulgaria joined Germany and Austria-Hungary and later had to sign the Treaty of Neuilly. Again in 1941 Bulgaria—having neither forgotten nor learned anything—for the third time, taking advantage of the Italo-German invasion, attacked her neighbors Greece and Yugoslavia in order to grab territories to which she had no rights whatsoever. There is no doubt that justice will be done again, but this time the United Nations will have to resort to sterner measures to prevent a recurrence of that chronic Bulgarian malady.

There might be, as you point out, a vague pro-Russian feeling, but the bulk of the population, led by the general staff, the officers' corps and the so-called intelligentsia or bourgeoise, are thoroughly and incurably pro-German, and the reason is obvious: Only Germany and naturally her satellites could make promises based on aggression.

My experience of four years in Bulgaria is that any distinction between the Bulgarian people and their leading classes has no foundation, as the facts have repeatedly shown during the last three decades.

Labor's Role

The editorial in The Post of October 13 entitled "Union Leadership" is one of those cases, not too frequent, however, where credit must and should be given. I like the idea of studying for postwar problems because there are most certainly going to be those problems, and it is only fitting that the labor movement should have a voice and hand in the settlement of those problems.

Also in the winning of this war it is necessary that labor take a hand in settling the problems of production. With the establishment of labor-management committees, such as those already in operation in more than 900 plants throughout the country, production is bound to be stepped up with better relationship between employer and employe.

I fully agree with the editorial when it states "union responsibility." A successful war will be waged with the trinity of government, labor and industry. Let's have more editorials and news items showing the role of the unions and what they are doing, and less labor-baiting.

A Man's War

With all talk circulating around the country these days concerning the induction of 18 and 19 year-old boys in the Army, I think it is high time someone put in a word in behalf of these youths who have remained fairly quiet about the thing as a whole.

Most of these lads are willing and eager to serve their country as fighters in the armed forces. In fact, many of them have already enlisted. But the irony of the thing is that Congress, in an expression of the will of the majority, will vote the 18-19 year-olds in the Army without allowing the lads a single aye or nay in the matter. Being minors they are not allowed to vote.

In peacetime, youth, especially young men in the 18-20 age group, are looked on as wild, irresponsible, reckless and even dissipated. In war the military experts say they have the "dash" and "spirit" so necessary in battle.

Wild and reckless in peacetime. Dashing and spirited in war. Not mature and intelligent enough to vote a man's vote in the election but, considered good enough to fight a man's war. That is our modern, American youth.

And a bunch of old mossbacks on Capitol Hill haven't got the spunk to vote the 18-year-olds in the service before election because they're so afraid for their jobs.

Key Posts

You must have considered it of considerable importance when you assigned front-page space to the story about Mr. Rhets' resignation from the post of head of the foreign division of the War Production Board. Upon examination, however, I cannot find any justification for ever having appointed a lawyer without any foreign trade experience to head such an important branch of the Government service in the leading war agency.

There is the mystery of the confusion and chaos which is prevailing in the Government. As one of your correspondents pointed out some months ago: "Woe when shoemakers begin to bake pies and bakers to mend shoes." It is high time to stop this foolishness. The Civil Service Commission should be ordered by the President to re-examine all the key posts held in the various war agencies. First of all they should examine the caliber of the men who are doing the selecting of the executive personnel. What qualifications have they? What experience in business have they ever had? And then turn to the incumbents of positions and do a thorough job of it. The country can afford nothing less.

Storing Cars

It seems to me that the person in charge who has permitted thousands of new cars to stand out in open lots for all these months is guilty of criminal negligence, and some action should be taken to stop it immediately.

If it is impossible to find inside storage space, which I doubt, at least the wheels could be taken off and put inside the cars and many thousands of good tires would not be left to rot on the ground.

It Eats Well

"I can dinner you and I can supper you, but I can't breakfast you until I get some sausage that eats well," said our bustling boarding-house keeper as she rushed to the box phone and cranked vigorously.

There followed a long and spirited exchange with the one and only meat man in this little Vermont village, a man who is just as independent as a "hog on ice," to use the words of our landlady. If he liked you, you got meat that ate well. Otherwise you were doomed to a pretty gristley existence.

It was much the same with the milkman. All around the lake the cottagers whom the milkman favored got cream. Those whom he did not fancy found only a bluishly anemic liquid in their milk cans.

Waiting for the lady to finish her phone call and summon us to breakfast, we huddled around the fireplace. For it was August, and August often becomes November in Vermont.

As usual, the conversation turned to food, perhaps because rationing prospects made us more keenly aware of our present blessings.

"Speaking of things eating well," said a naval officer who had recently arrived in our midst, "reminds me of something which didn't! We were aboard a transport and it was Christmas eve. Everyone was feeling pretty low, the ship was rolling like a drunken duchess, and our digestive systems were already rocky. Unfortunately, someone in the galley had an inspiration to add a bit of holiday cheer to our chow. So the mashed potato arrived in a somewhat peculiar state. Half of it had been colored red, half of it green! It didn't eat well. In fact," he said, puckering up his mouth, "it didn't eat at all!"

"That makes me think of a very bad moment I once had in Munich," said Miss T., a thin spinster from Boston who went through life with a bottle of bicarbonate in one hand and an aspirin tablet in the other.

"You all know how extremely careful I have to be about what I eat. Specially eggs. Well, I ordered a two-minute egg for my breakfast. But the waiter couldn't seem to understand my German. So I had to resort to all sorts of absurd pantomime, cackling and whatnot, to get the idea of the egg and the boiling water across. Then when it finally came," she paused dramatically, "it consisted of a huge stein of beer with a raw egg floating on the foam!"

"Getting back to things which do eat well," said a young professor with a carefully tended Oxford accent, "I had an unforgettable meal at Mont St. Michel. Everything was high, the Rock itself, the little inn perched on the edge, and the plates! At the table, in front of each person, were stacked about six or seven plates, one atop the other, with a soup bowl crowning the entire structure. The thing came almost to our chins! First, a potage was poured into the bowl; and when we had finished that, the bowl was removed, and oysters, trailing green seaweed, were placed on the plate below. After these, on the next landing, came a potato-and-cheese affair. And so, by delightful degrees, we ate our way down to tablecloth level."

"You may travel the world around," stated a sweet old lady in tones as precise as the high, boned collar she always wore, "yet never, I presume, find the like of the Vermont breakfast we are going to have."

Just then the cowbell rang, calling us to eat, and we rose like a ballet of trained seals and rushed into the dining room.

Here a small, black stove gleamed with new polish. Starched, white curtains framed the bay window through which we could see the green hills. And a long table, covered with a crocheted tablecloth, looked as if about to "ride out" from the weight of food it upheld.

"Don't know as it's much of a breakfast," said our hostess, "but see if you can make out a meal somehow.

"Lottie," she called crisply, "bring in the butter. We don't want to have to eat beans on our bread!"

"Has everybody been creamed?" she asked, passing a large, luster pitcher of heavy cream and following it with another of maple syrup. There was no sugar on the table, but there seemed to be everything else.

There were fat cucumber slices, bowls of black raspberries, odds and ends of cold pie, a plate or two of chocolate cookies, raised doughnuts and cottage cheese, eggs poached in maple syrup, a platter of griddle cakes, another of blueberry muffins, glasses of rich milk, a brown jug of baked beans and a mound of country sausage.

"Now about this sausage," said our landlady as she rained a perfect dust storm of salt over her cucumbers and then laid it with a flood of vinegar, "I want you should be sure to tell me how you think it eats. I had such a time getting it, and the meatman claimed it was good, but I guess it won't amount to bugdust. Too much sage in it."

"Oh, no," we protested, almost in one voice, and meaning every word of it, "IT EATS WELL!"

Today And Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

F. D. R. And The Press

SOMETIME or other when he can manage to get around to it Mr. Roosevelt might find it useful to clarify his ideas about the relations in this war between the Government and the independent press. For it is painfully clear that he is so much annoyed with so many of us that his displeasure, like the rain, falls equally upon the just and upon the unjust.

LIPPMANN

Surely this is not going to do anybody much good. We have an independent press in this country, and its faults, which are many and undeniable, will not be corrected by wisecracks. Newspapermen are human, perhaps all too human, and I cannot help thinking that most of them would respond if they were treated as adult men and not as naughty schoolboys. For an institution like a free press rests not only on the Constitution and the laws and on the Four Freedoms but on manners and on custom—on courtesy and on respect and on trust.

IT IS evident that there is a defect somewhere in the relationship between the President and the press, and I venture to believe that if we look into it enough, we shall find that we are all suffering, the President and the newspapers, for want of a responsible, well-informed and constructive opposition. There have been some good critics in Congress of scattered phases of the war effort. But there has been no leader, unless Mr. Willkie settles down to become that leader, who has the privilege of knowing all that is going on inside and at the same time the right, which he exercises subject to his conscience and with the help of wise counselors, to ask questions that must be answered and to make proposals that must be considered.

For lack of this kind of dependable opposition, the burden of criticism has fallen almost entirely upon correspondents and editors and commentators. Of course, as the President keeps telling them, they do not know nearly so much about everything as he knows about everything. Of course, they frequently hear only part of the story, say what one of his subordinates thinks and not what all of them think or what he himself thinks, and that must be very annoying and not at all the way things ought to be in a more perfect world. Now if there were a responsible and informed opposition, the correspondents would not have to choose between Government handouts and their own spasmodic and insufficient private investigations, and editors would be able to analyze and interpret and comment upon an informed debate instead of having to conduct the debate themselves.

WHAT Mr. Roosevelt must not assume, even unconsciously, is that in this vast and complicated struggle he does not need the help of an opposition. He needs it very much. No matter how great his vision and his initiative, they are not sufficient to the immense tasks which have to be done, and many things that must be done do not, therefore, get done.

Two examples, neither in the realm of typewriter strategy, will prove this. We have been mobilizing our resources for nearly two and a half years. But the authority of the War Production Board is not yet clearly defined or adequately implemented or sufficiently related, as it must become, to military planning. Much has been accomplished. But can there be any doubt that the record will show that while the President has led, the critics have also had to prod?

More than two years have passed since the country committed itself to a military program which has become greater than any ever undertaken by any nation in all history. Obviously this entailed a profound and universal change in the economic life of the country. But it is only during this month that the Administration has organized itself to regulate this transformation, and it has not yet got around to adopting a fiscal program or a system for regulating purchasing power, or a system of national service. Can it be denied that if there had been a more effective opposition, there would have been a surer, a quicker, and a more resolute leadership?

WHAT HAS been the trouble? The trouble has been that Mr. Roosevelt was in fact too busy with too many things to take hold of these questions and decide who in his official family should settle them. On the outside there was no opposition strong enough to force the issue and end the drifting and compel decisions. There was only scattered private criticism. Much of it was instinctively right, but it was not sufficiently informed and documented to compel a hearing, and some of it was foolish, wrongheaded, and even malicious. I can well understand that to the President, who through the dark days of disaster and defeat carried such a weight of anxiety and of woe so gallantly, the whole of this criticism must have seemed like a swarm of flies buzzing around his head, and that to ask him to discriminate between the gadflies and the midges was perhaps asking too much.

Yet a critical opposition is indispensable, and in so far as it is not made more responsible it will inevitably become more irresponsible. Mr. Roosevelt may discredit his conscientious, even if imperfect, critics: the only result will be to strengthen and multiply his irreconcilable critics.

THERE WILL have to be more criticism. For it is becoming quite evident that owing to the traffic jam which still exists at the White House, many urgent matters are stalled way down the line. Unfortunately, there is a similar difficulty in London, and in consequence projects languish and decisions are not made which are absolutely necessary to the conduct of the coalition war as a whole and to a healthy evolution of British-American relations specifically. The affairs of two great states, both of them in the midstream of an immense historical movement, cannot be conducted solely on a day-to-day basis by preoccupied men. Yet less preoccupied men have no authority to decide. This is the true cause of the little irritations which are causing many to forget the meaning and the shape of the war, and thus their paramount duty and their vital interest.

The time could come when Mr. Roosevelt could wish that, instead of resenting the critics, he had responded to such grains of truth as may be found in all their chaff.

The Once Over

Purkey's Discovery

Dear Ma.

Well, I been laboring under a idea I been at the front right in the thick of battle, but it turns out I was in a TD Camp instead. TD stands for Tank Destroyer. Now if two years ago anybody had of told me I wood be taking lessons how to outfight a fifty ton tank I wood of just given him a horse laff. I expected man-to-man fighting in this war but not man-to-tank fighting, on account of I always serposed tanks was destroyed by other tanks.

Yes I read all about David and Golliath but from what I been through in this TD unit I gess David was just doing Boy Scout exercises. In addishun to learning me how to destroy tanks whenever one busts into my life I am teached how to meet the dirtiest work any enemy can offer and double it in spades. We get all around commandoe training also and they forgot nothing accept how to make a flying tackle of a buzzsaw and the best way to make a trip through a concrete mixer in a two-piece suit and helmet.

You see that circus stunt where a man makes a big fuss about getting shot out of a cannon, mom, well that is nothing. I get showed how to enter a cannon when it is being fired and make the shell sue me for peace. They got everything in this camp that they got in Egypt, Stallingrad and Guadalcanal but the medals. There is more barbed wire used here than Hitler had for the first two years of his hole campaign. I am trained how to go through it like it was cobwebs. If I survive a day's training and there is a inch of my uniform that ain't torn they send the wire back as not up to specerficashuns.

They also got seven foot stone walls, big piles of brush, open country with all kinds of traps in it and even dark tunnels witch we have to go into and learn to fight in the dark. I half to laff when I think back how in civilyun life I was even nervus about fighting in the light. Then they have built a Nazi village in witch dummies pop out suddenly from doors and windows so I will get trained to shoot quick instead of waiting for my nerves to steady.

I open a door and out pops a figure and I am serposed to know at once that is not no Gallup poll man and nobody selling magazines to work his way through college. If I hesitate a second the umpire rules me dead. Over my head live ammunishun is being fired all the time. It could all be entitled "Through the Chamber of Horrors With a Tommy Gun and a Iron Will."

Also we get teached to go miles across swamps on our stommicks loading without getting up. We have to swim rivers, leap over walls and like I said befor we get speshul lessons in making tanks yell uncle. We use Mollotovv cocktails or gasoleen bombs witch we are serposed to toss right into these tanks with no more nervusness than if we was mailing a postcard.

Do not worry, though, as I am now so tough nothing can bother me. Any time I am not all out of breath trying to outfight a tank or make a barbed wire fence finish second I think there must be a armistice.

Well I got to finish now as we are going to spend the day getting teached what was wrong at Dieppe, so I will close with all my love to you and dad.

Your loving son, OSCAR.

P. S.—I hoap I get sent to the real war soon as it will be kind of a furlough where I can rest up from all the excitement.

Yank Magazine tells about the supply sergeant who tossed a uniform to a doughboy and got the answer. "Gosh, this fits me perfectly." The S. S. looked at him in astonishment and chirped, "Boy, you must be deformed."

Chilean Incident

By Virginia Prewett

Good Neighbor Corollary

WHEN Acting Secretary of State Welles last Saturday told the people of Chile and Argentina publicly and flatly that their governments' action in harboring Axis spies was a stab in the back for the other nations of this hemisphere, he did more than call a showdown on a local situation.

This is the strongest public reproof that has come directly from our State Department to any Latin-American nation or nations since the Good Neighbor Policy was announced in 1932. The reproof itself and the chain of events that made it necessary clearly underline a corollary to this policy that the United States has not prevoiously had to emphasize so directly. It is that the Good Neighbor Policy is not a one-way proposition. It must work both ways.

In emphasizing this point, the United States does not act from what I shall call "unilateral motives." The question is not our interests versus Argentina's or our interests versus Chile's. If this were so, it might be possible for us to continue our role of patient waiting till the governments of the two hang-back nations get around to a cooperative attitude—that is, till they are sure we will win the war.

But the truth today is that the United States has been forced to call a showdown not only for ourselves but also for our fighting allies among the American republics and the others who have gone to bat against the Axis. These are in all 18 nations. They were ardently wooed by the Axis for years, as ardently as Argentina and Chile. When we were attacked they chose our side. We have a duty to them that is as much a national obligation as the protection of our own interests.

THE ARGENTINE situation has been extremely unsatisfactory ever since the Castillo group got into control there, but it has been clearcut. The Castillo group has made gestures to keep Axis interests balanced against hemisphere interests. But these gentures have grown more and more perfunctory and no hopes of transigence have been held out since Rio. Most of us have had it brought to our attention that Argentina's government is not in step with its people, but that Castillo's control of the senate makes it impossible for the prodemocratic majority in the chamber of deputies to break the political deadlock there.

Chile's case is very different. Here we have a country where elections are democratic and not controlled.

The Chilean government's behavior has been very different, also. They have consistently "talked" a good cooperation and have consistently kept up hopes that they would break relations. At the same time, the yhave consistently availed themselves of the advantages of these hopes.

Their tactic has been a series of excuses, misunderstandings and apparently conciliatory moves. At the time of Rio Chile was involved in a presidential election. We were asked to understand this and American opinion did reserve judgment on Chile on this account.

RIOS' election was supposed to be a pro-democratic triumph and we were much encouraged. The appointment of Ernesto Barros Jarpa, long known as a friend of the United States, to the post of foreign minister, was a definitely hopeful sign by any normal standards.

But Chile did not break relations. Finally it was "understood" that they understood that we did not want them to. The Chilean excuse was that while they kept relations, the Axis would not attack ore ships to the United States. Everything remained friendly on the surface and Ambassador Michels went to Chile to explain this "mistake" away.

Chile still did not rupture relations and Barros Jarpa appeared as stumbling block. According to "unofficial" impression, it was he who kept President Rios from understanding the true attitude of the United States.

ALL this time the fact that these relations were shielding Axis spies was no secret.

The pattern of Nazi espionage was the same all over Latin America till other nations broke it up. When I was in Santiago de Chile this spring, names, places and acts of sabotage and espionage were known to Americans and Chileans alike. On July 25 it was pointed out here that Axis spies had an open field in Chile against American shipping, and a point that Welles did not mention was brought out—that these spies could act against American warships operating in Pacific waters.

NOR CAN the Rios government have failed to realize another fact brought out here—that the United States has favored Chile more, rather than less, in the war emergency. Ambassador Bowers has been an ardent supporter of Chile's hopes to build a national industry producing special steels. Long after the United States was straining to supply and arm half the world, we still managed to send Chile machinery and supplies for the hydroelectric development she had undertaken as the first step toward realizing her steel dream.

But there is an even more recent and more striking example that shows how far we were prepared to take Chile on trust. As important to Chile as her steel idea is her dream of finding oil. She has made frantic efforts to do so during recent years. This fall the possibility that she may have oil within the national territory was confirmed. Drilling equipment from the United States was needed to make tests. No machinery has a greater demand than this. Less than two months ago the way was cleared for the green light on this high-priority equipment for Chile—and there were no strings attached.

CHILE MIGHT have gone on indefinitely talking a good cooperation and performing nothing if President Roosevelt had not invited President Rios here for a visit. President Rios could not fail to understand that we could not afford to have him here while his country kept relations with our enemies. He had the opportunity to decline gracefully, but he chose to accept. His failure to break relations right up to the eve of his departure was a slap at the United States. It made our position untenable.

Foreign Minister Barros Jarpa has been made the scapegoat of the present situation and he is the handiest one. When I was in Chile last spring I discussed Chilean-American relations with Barros Jarpa fully and frankly. I found his thinking realistic and informed. Barros Jarpa's record for 20 years has been friendly to the United States. His record as doubtful friend began when he joined the government that has a consistent record of doubtful friendship. In the opinion of this writer no one man, neither Barros Jarpa nor President Rios nor any other individual, is swaying Chile today. All the members of the government have obviously been carrying out an agreed-on policy—the policy of promising much and performing nothing while they waited to see who should win the war.

Nazi propaganda must have convinced Chile, as it has convinced the Castillo group in Argentina, that the country has a great potential stake in a Nazi victory. What this propaganda is in both nations will be discussed in a subsequent article.

Life's Advice To England

By Barnet Nover

The War And The Empire's Defense

THAT COMBINATION of ignorance and emotionalism which has for so long characterized the thinking of many Americans on questions of our foreign relations is beautifully illustrated in the now notorious "open letter" which the editors of Life saw fit to address to the people of England.

NOVER

"Quit fighting a war to hold the Empire together," says the letter, "and join with us and Russia and your other allies to fight a war to win by whatever strategy is best for all of us."

The British are then told: "If you cling to the Empire at the expense of a United Nations victory you will lose the war. Because you will lose us."

EXACTLY what the editors of Life meant by this threat is not at all clear. The British interpreted it to mean that if they refuse to fight the war the way we want it fought we shall pick up our marbles and retreat to the sidelines, leaving them to play alone.

This, apparently, is not what Life intended to say, however, although it is not hard to see why the British, not realizing that the "open letter" was written in some kind of an obscure emotional code, took the words at their face value.

What is clear, even to those lacking a key to what the writer of the open letter was really trying to say, is that Life believes that Britain's efforts to defend her Empire somehow conflict with the strategy which the United Nations must pursue to win the war.

THIS IDEA will appeal to that not inconsiderable number of Americans whose anti-British feelings are not far below when not well above the surface. They will applaud Life's remark that "one thing we are sure we are not fighting for is to hold the British Empire together."

Actually, of course, the implication's of Life's gripe are plain nonsense. If Americans and other United Nations' peoples have any justified grievance against the British (they have also plenty of justified grievances against us) it is that the British did not, in the years before the war, take adequate measures to defend the empire and have not defended it with sufficient forces and skill since, rather than that their principal concern has been the defense of the Empire.

IT WAS PRECISELY because he was imperial-minded that Winston Churchill fought so long and hard against the Chamberlain appeasers in Great Britain. He realized that the defense of the empire, as well as of England, began wherever the aggressors were menacing. When Czecho-Slovakia was turned over to the tender mercies of the Nazis Britain was imperilled and also Australia. Conversely the defense of Hongkong, Singapore and Malaya, just as is the case today with Australia, India and Libya, was also a defense of the United Nations cause.

The trouble was that the Chamberlains of Britain not only abandoned invaluable bastions on the continent of Europe, they also were laggard in building up an adequate defense for the empire. But that hurt not only the British Empire—it also hurts us.

If Hongkong had held out for months instead of days, if Singapore had really proved impregnable, if adequate forces had been maintained in Burma it is not only the British but all of us—Americans, Chinese, Russians and others of the United Nations—who would have benefited. The loss of Hongkong, Singapore, Malaya, Burma and the other strategic points in the British Empire were our losses, no less than British losses, our defeats as well as British defeats. Similarly, should the Japanese overrun India and Australia and the Germans reach Suez and the Persian Gulf, it would be a staggering blow to all of us.

BUT THE EDITORS of Life do not complain that the British deserve castigation because they have not been defending the empire adequately and, because of that, have made our task harder. What they suggest is that the defense of the empire is somehow contrary to the aims, aspirations and interests of the United States.

This happens to be a misreading of past history as well as of the demands of present-day strategy. The British Empire is an old and far-ranging institution. Many things were done by the British in the course of building up that empire, many things have been done by them in the process of maintaining it, which do not fit into an ideal pattern of international conduct.

The British are the first to admit it. They have been their own best—and worst—critics in this regard. But no student of American or world history can say that the existence of the British Empire has during the past century constituted a danger to us. On the contrary, we cut fat dividends of uninterrupted security over a period of many decades because of the existence of that empire. In this particular British self-interest coincided with American self-interest.

Nor do Britain's present efforts to defend India, the Middle East, Egypt, Gibraltar and Malta, run contrary to the interests of the United Nations. If that were the case the United States would not be helping in the defense of those areas. We are doing so because global strategy demands that those points be held. And thinking of the future we may well ask ourselves whether we and the world generally would be better off if Britain lost her empire and was reduced to the status of a weak, over-crowded kingdom living precariously on the edge of Europe.

U-Boats More Active Along African Coast, But Allied Ships Seek Bases

By the Associated Press

London, Oct. 14.—Evidence indicated today that U-boat warfare is spreading systematically down the African Atlantic Coast to Capetown, and a British source said Allied warships probably were seeking out mother ships and shore bases along the shipping route to the Indian Ocean.

On October 10, Joseph Morton, an Associated Press writer, reported from West Africa that "small, new model German U-boats . . . are striking renewed blows against Allied shipping, apparently with the help of pro-Nazi countries which are technically neutral. The same day a German communique reported 12 merchant ships sunk "directly before" the Capetown Harbor.

On October 13, Prime Minister Smuts of the Union of South Africa arrived in London for war conferences.

Today, a German communique reported the sinking of four merchantmen between Capetown and Freetown, West Africa, among them the 23,456-ton British liner Orcades and the 20,119-ton Canadian Duchess of Atholl, both "engaged in transporting troops to Egypt."

The British spokesman told today of the intensifying German submarine campaign around the Cape of Good Hope and of Allied counter-measures probably already undertaken.

He said the U-boats had been "forced further afield by defensive tactics," and had moved to the South African coastal waters where enemy action had been confined mainly to mine sowing and occasional forays by surface craft and U-boats.

"We now see a new phase beginning with U-boat concentrations," he said, adding that the operations presumably were carried out with a complete supply setup since "it would be uneconomical to send a submarine from France to the cape without some source of supply in the area."

The spokesman surmised that the best method to counter the new threat would be destruction of refueling contacts and concluded that Allied warships were seeking them out.

Gasoline, Fuel Oil Stocks Off in Week

New York, Oct. 14 (AP).—Total stores of gasoline and residual fuel oil supplies declined in the week ended October 10, but distillates showed an increase, the American Petroleum Institute reported today.

Gas oil and distillate fuel (light fuel oil) stores increased 257,000 barrels during the week to a total of 46,007,000. Residual (heavy fuel oil) supplies were down 355,000 barrels to 78,681,000.

Total finished and unfinished stocks of gasoline declined 630,000 barrels to 79,731,000, compared with 80,361,000 at the end of the previous week and 80,432,000 a year ago.

Treasury Silver Sales Proposed; Fight Expected

By the Associated Press

Legislation to permit the Treasury to sell nonmonetary silver to private industry for consumptive use and to lend monetary silver for nonconsumptive purposes was approved yesterday by a Senate Banking subcommittee, but Senator McCarran (Democrat), Nevada, said that Senators from silver States would oppose it "most heartily."

The measure, introduced by Senator Green (Democrat), Rhode Island, would authorize the President, through the Treasury and on War Production Board recommendation, to sell at not less than 50 cents an ounce, lease or otherwise dispose of silver for uses not inconsistent with the war effort. The silver would go to industry, Government departments or to foreign governments.

The bill, which would expire December 31, 1944, had the approval of the Treasury and the WPB.

N. Y. Central Board Silent on Dividend

New York, Oct. 14 (AP).—Directors of the New York Central Railroad held their regular monthly meeting today, but made no announcement if anything other than routine matters came up for discussion.

Some Wall Street quarters had suggested the directors might consider a dividend on the capital stock in view of the current high earnings of the railroad. The last dividend Central paid was $1 a share in 1931.

Yanks' Doc Painter Released by McCarthy

This Morning

—With Shirley Povich

Assuming that there will be major league baseball in 1943, we were thinking that the St. Louis Cardinals did a service to seven-eighths of the American League by beating the Yankees in the World Series. The Cardinals exposed the Yankees as spurious Invincibles.

POVICH

Not the least factor in the Yankees' domination of the American League for so many years was the awe in which they were held by other clubs. The complaint was heard, with some justification, that certain American League clubs were licked by the Yankees before they took the field. The Yanks, smart fellows, liked to promote this inferiority complex. The Yanks liked to pour it on, for the effect it might have on tomorrow's game. We don't ever remember when the Yanks pulled their punches.

The job of beating the Yankees became tougher for other American League clubs when they played in Yankee Stadium. There, the Yankees piled up their greatest margin. The Nats, for example, have won only four games in Yankee Stadium in the last three seasons. Yankee Stadium was tough to hit in, was a league-wide complaint. The shadows were troublesome and the background for the batters was poor. Only the Yanks were at home in their big stadium.

But it is significant that the Cardinals won the World Series by winning three straight games in Yankee Stadium. The shadows and the background apparently didn't bother a team that carried the fight to the Yankees. Those Cardinals were sort of wonderful the way they beat the Yankees—bouncing back after a defeat in the first game, to close out the Yanks in four straight.

During the recent series it was difficult to grasp a true picture of how the Cardinals were applying the pressure to the Yankees in the same manner the Yanks had been in the habit of dealing it out to other clubs. Things were happening so fast and thrillingly, that the over-all picture of the series was easily lost in the rapid-fire excitement of the games, but it is now possible to understand just what sort of pressure the Yanks were up against.

Even in their first-game defeat, after Mort Cooper, their best pitcher, was knocked out of the box and the Yanks had a 7-0 lead going into the ninth, the Cardinals served notice that it wasn't going to be a soft-touch for the Yankees. They rapped out six hits in the ninth, reduced the score to the respectable figures of 7-4, and had the tying runs on base before the inning was over. It was a demonstration to shake the confidence of the Yankees.

Cardinal base running helped beat the Yankees in the second game. It was a lesson to American League clubs. Speed could offset some of that Yankee power. But that Cardinal speed was only one form of pressure. The Cards quickly showed the Yankees they could take few liberties on the bases. When Enos Slaughter threw out Pinch Runner Tuck Stainbach from deep right field on a phenomenal heave to third base, it was noticed that the Yankees couldn't expect to go from first to third on a right field single for the rest of the series without taking a great risk. That was more pressure on the Yanks.

The Cardinals showed the Yankees how a good team bunts. On two occasions, Yankee pitchers attempted to turn bunts into force-plays at second base and failed, with the result that all runners were safe. Thereafter, the Yanks were content to make the conventional out at first on Cardinal bunts. Not only content, we should say happy. Because every one of those Cardinals seemed to be perfect bunters. Whenever a Cardinal laid down a bunt, there was more pressure on the Yanks.

The Yankees were put under pressure by the Cardinals from another direction—the Cards' outfield defense. Enos Slaughter's first-game muff of Ruffing's fly ball was the only lapse of the Cardinals' outfielders. Terry Moore and Slaughter made catches of Yankee drives that could have inducted a what's-the-use psychology among Yankee sluggers. The Yanks were up against a team whose outfielders let nothing go over their heads. In the American League, the Yanks were used to getting triples and homers on those blows Moore and Slaughter caught.

The Cardinals showed the other American League clubs that a team which doesn't fold easily always has a chance to beat the Yankees. In the second and third games of the series, the Yankees came from behind to wipe out Cardinals' leads and tie the score. Such a turn of affairs in the American League has usually been the signal for the Yankees to go on and win as they pleased, once they caught the opposition. But those Cardinals had bounce. They didn't surrender, and they won both games.

On paper, the Cardinals didn't seem to rate with the Yankees, but the Cards weren't content to accept the paper rating. It's difficult anyway, to put the intelligence quotient on paper, and the Cards proved to be a pretty bright team. That was great stuff when Walker Cooper and Jimmy Marion collaborated to pick Joe Gordon off second base in the ninth inning of the deciding game. It was so exciting, it made folks sort of forget that Gordon was the third Yankee the Cardinals had picked off base in the short series.

On the Line

How About These Grid Sideliners?

New York, Oct. 14.—The sports pages ram an awful lot of stuff about stars and super teams down your gullet each fall, but like Joe E. Lewis, who goes to the movies only to see the credit line given to "Sound by Western Electric," I also have my obscure favorites.

There are dozens of strange people hovering on the fringe of football. Few of them even get a credit line, yet they attained their positions by dint of more determination than went into the making of an All-America halfback. It would be unkind to call this the lunatic fringe, but here and there a career or two may have been helped along a bit by a solid knock on the skull.

CONSIDINE

There is the drum major, for instance. We felt for years that selective service should have gone into effect the day, many years ago, when the first football drum major strutted down the field, trying to walk like a circus horse. Now I am resigned to them as a special breed with several resemblances in homo sapiens. They have parents who come to watch only them, even girls whose pretty heads are turned by the stiff-legged antics. I never saw one eat, however. In fact, I never saw one without a shako.

—And There's the Football Guessers

And baton twirlers. They practice more than the team does. Theirs is a considerably keener science than the act of running over a tackler. Roy Riegals, the poor sucker who ran the wrong way and never lived it down, probably suffered no more than a baton twirler who, on the final twirl, muffed the shiny stick when it came whirring down out of the air. The Foreign Legion must have been full of them.

We like most of the people who win the newspaper football guesses contests, too. They have such a wonderful detachment. So few of them would deign to attend a game. Our favorite was a charwoman who picked one of the coupons off a floor one night, added up her grocery bill in the vacant spaces and won $250 and two tickets to the Rose Bowl game. She had picked the correct score of 15 tough games, while the best that any lifelong student of football entered in the contest could do that week was 4 rights and 11 wrongs.

Of course, we can't overlook the assistant managers in charge of broken straps on trusses, and the kid with thick glasses who holds the front end of the bass drum. Fraternity politics may have aided the assistant manager's dizzy rise to power in the government of the game, but the front boy on the bass drum had to come up the hard way. We can't think of anything lower on which he might have started, but there must be a lot of fierce competition for the job. After all, he is but inches removed from what must be the glorious peak of all ambition for this segment of the fringe—the bass drummer himself.

Chair Pushing Was His Talent

Another kid we admired was the Notre Dame lad, bright-eyed with pride, who used to follow Knute Rockne around the practice field with a chair and shove it under the fundiment of the great man whenever he stopped and began to sit down. The kid never missed, but nobody ever thought to put his jersey in a glass case and keep it on exhibition at the school. Could Joe Savoldi have done the job as well?

Then we have the hair-splitters, fine-line-drawers, decimal dervishes and atom-smashers who get up those weekly ranking lists. Last season our affection for the Williamson System was alienated, in a weak moment, by the Lambert Trophy Committee ratings of

Redskins View Movies of Two 1941 Games

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

It rained yesterday, so like thousands of other Washingtonians, the Redskins went to the movies.

They didn't see "Mrs. Miniver" or "Pride of the Yankees," however, but they sat through two football performances in the darkened bandroom at Griffith Stadium.

Both were 1941 productions. The first one was entitled "Redskins 3, Brooklyn Dodgers 0," starring Joe Aguirre, the place-kick hero, while the second one was a tear-jerker. It was "Dodgers 13, Redskins 7." Perry Schwartz was the star of the second run on the double-feature program, as the film ran out on Sammy Baugh's heroic attempts to save the game.

Coach Ray Flaherty decided on the movie diet after about half the squad dressed and tried to move around the stadium mud but it was useless. After the screenings the critics went through a skull drill and spent the rest of the morning mapping out a defense against Mike Getto's Brooklyns.

To Go Outdoors

The Redskins will go outside today, however, regardless of the weather as Flaherty is anxious to get in a little wet-ball handling.

The 'Skins heard Dutch Bergman's scout report the night before and Dutch reported the Steelers, who upset Brooklyn 7-0, showed a 100 per cent improvement over the team that played here. That means more bad news for next week when the 'Skins travel to Pittsburgh.

Bill Hargiss, Getto's assistant at Brooklyn, scouted the Redskins against the Cleveland Rams Sunday and saw the 'Skins at their best. He took a pessimistic story back to Getto, but after talking to the head coach they agreed both the Dodgers and Rams played dull, offenseless ball games, far below their standard.

Hargiss conceded the Redskins

Jocko Miller, Assistant Golf Pro, Sworn Into Navy

To Be Chief Specialist In Physical Fitness Program Under Tunney

Jocko Miller, assistant golf professional and caddy-master at Congressional Country Club for the past three years, was sworn in yesterday as a chief specialist in Comdr. Gene Tunney's U. S. naval physical education program.

Miller will leave for Norfolk, Va., November 4 and expects to remain at Congressional until the end of the month.

Miller was a well-known amateur boxer here and in Boston, reaching the semifinals of the Nationals on two occasions and losing to the champion each time. He was coach of the Columbus University boxing team last year.

The rotund golf pro has a sports background which also includes basketball and football. He did not work his golf games for tournament purposes but was a good mixer and served as starter and matchmaker.

Miller's first pro job here was at Bradley Hills but he resigned after one season to go with Wiffy Cox at Congressional. He lives in nearby Virginia with his wife and 6-month-old daughter.

Teen-Age Draft Not to Hurt College Game

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Oct. 14.—College football will continue next year despite the proposed draft of youths 18-19 years old, John L. Griffith, commissioner of the Western Conference, said today.

"Even if our boys of 18 and 19 are drafted, we'll still be able to have college football next year," Griffith declared. "We'll still be able to put teams on the field and that is what we plan to do unless President Roosevelt or high military officials make some other request.

"We will do whatever the Government orders, for this much is definite: The decision to play football next year will not be ours.

"The best indication that we will be able to play next year," Griffith continued, "is the high value our military men place on competitive athletics in general and football in particular.

"Naturally, the draft will take many of our athletes whose average age is a little over 19. We will have to get along with boys under 18 or some 'old men' 24 years of age.

"Also, the quality of our teams undoubtedly won't be so good, but that is not the important thing. The benefits derived by the boys in getting ready for military life are much more important. And the quality may not be so bad at that. I know this season has been a surprise to many of us. Few of us thought there would be so many good teams."

Club Trainer Angry Over His Dismissal

No Explanation Given for Release; Had Been With Yanks 13 Years

By the Associated Press

New York, Oct. 14.—After having been trainer of the Yankees for 13 years, Dr. Earl Painter has been dismissed by Manager Joe McCarthy of the American League champions.

The veteran mender of a thousand breaks and sprains was thoroughly angry today as he called at the Yankee office to turn in his keys. He just had returned from an interview with Manager McCarthy at Buffalo, where he said he was denied an explanation of the firing.

"The first I knew of it was a letter from McCarthy," he said. "I went up to ask him why—if there had been anything wrong with my work—but all I got was a promise to recommend me to other clubs. I think it's just that he has somebody else he wants to give the job to.

Painter said he was leaving for St. Petersburg, Fla., to dispose of his home there and probably would return to this area to open a private practice.

Middies Take Boat to Game Saturday

By the Associated Press

Annapolis, Oct. 14.—Navy's 1600 midshipmen rooters, who will travel by Chesapeake Bay steamer to the sailors' football game with Yale at Baltimore Saturday, are all set to make a day of it.

The steamer, Bay Belle, leaves the Naval Academy Santee dock at 9:30 a. m., arriving at Baltimore's recreation pier shortly after noon, the midshipmen then will march directly to the Municipal Stadium, reaching the game site 45 minutes before the contest begins.

Following the game, the midshipmen, comprising two battalions of the entire Naval Academy regiment, will be granted Liberty until 9:15 p. m., when they'll report back to the Bay Belle for the return trip to Annapolis.

The excursion, first of its kind attempted by the Naval Academy, is expected to conclude at midnight Saturday. The water trip was planned after defense transportation officials ruled out special trains for sports events.

Donels Resigns Job At Iowa State

Ames, Iowa, Oct. 14 (U.P.).—Ray Donels, head football coach at Iowa State College, resigned today, midway in his second year of coaching at the Big Six school.

The Iowa State College Athletic Council accepted the resignation and immediately named A. M. (Mike) Michalske, line coach, as the new head coach.

EDWARD BARROW

Yankee President States Situation A 50-50 Affair

By the Associated Press

New York, Oct. 14.—President Ed Barrow of the New York Yankees thinks the 18-19 draft might help big league baseball to some extent, in that it promises to provide deferment for some of the older stars who have dependents, but he says it will knock the blocks from under the clubs' normal replacement program.

The elderly magnate was caught oiling up his hunting guns and preparing to spend his annual two weeks thinning out the animals on Tom Yawkey's vast game preserve on the Georgia coast and generally forgetting about the recent world series.

"Drafting the youngsters should enable us to keep some of our married players for another season," he conceded, having finally been drawn gently away from the subject of deer so thick you can hunt them with rocks. "But it also means that a lot of boys we had planned to bring in will be gone to the Army. It looks to me like about a fifty-fifty proposition."

The Yanks, he pointed out, already have lost three of their regulars of the past season—Tommy Henrich, Phil Rizzuto and Red Rolfe—so the question of replacements is an important one right now. He thinks, though, that the club has a great infield prototype coming up in George Stirnweiss, the former North Carolina football star who played with Newark this summer.

Cards Got Breaks

Barrow, frankly, is a trifle piqued at the way the sports writers went overboard about the Cardinals' victory in the series. He claims they got every break going in the five games.

"You young fellows seemed to forget that the Yankees ever had won anything," he complained, mildly. "You forgot how many World Series we had won before this one, or that we just had run away from the American League.

"Sure, the Cardinals were a hungry bunch of boys and hard fighters, but they got every break, too. Why, we hit 8 or 10 balls here at the stadium that would have been home runs in the St. Louis park or anywhere else.

"We got a bad break when Buddy Hassett broke his thumb in the second game and we missed Henrich, too. Everything considered, I think we did all right."

Unless "something drastic" happens between now and next spring, the Yankees president fully expects to pitch training camp at St. Petersburg and to play a full schedule of games in 1943. He anticipates some severe transportation problems and says, almost with relish, that some of his high-priced artists probably will find themselves sleeping two to an upper-berth.

Karcis' Lion Job Likened To Hans Lobert and Phils

Successor to Bill Edwards as Pro Coach, Has Tough Work Cut Out for Him

By the Associated Press

Detroit, Oct. 14.—Big John (Bull) Karcis hasn't yet acquired the label of "the Hans Lobert of pro football," but his new job with the Detroit Lions looks as hopeless as managing the Philadelphia Phils.

Karcis, 33-year-old former Carnegie Tech and National Football League fullback, is in his second week as coach of the Detroit club that has dropped four successive games and is the only league entry without victory. Only one of the setbacks is charged to the administration of Karcis, but even his best friends won't tell him that the future looks particularly good.

The Lions, trying desperately to rebound from a 38 to 7 licking to the Green Bay Packers in Karcis' debut as successor to Big Bill Edwards, next encounter the Chicago Cardinals, who won by two touchdowns last time. Then follow the Packers and the man-eating Chicago Bears. Not even Karcis has the courage to look any further down the schedule.

No Forward Passer

Detroit's prime shortcoming is lack of a forward passer in a league where the air lanes are always busy. Built around Byron (Whizzer) White, now in the Navy, the Lions won four of eleven games last year and finished third in the Western Division. Bobby Dethman of Oregon State's Rose Bowl champions had been slated for the Whizzer's pitching duties, but he, too, signed up with Uncle Sam.

That has left the Detroit aerial attack in relatively untried hands. Harry (Hippity) Hopp, former Nebraskan and brother of Johnny Hopp of the St. Louis Cardinals, and Murray Evans of Hardin-Simmons get most of the call.

But Karcis is willing to try anything. Against the Packers he sent a freshman end, Joe Stringfellow from Southern Mississippi, to the tailback job and got a good running performance. The Lions outgained the Packers nearly 2 yards to 1 on the ground, but it availed practically nothing.

"I still think we can win some games," the Bull said today after directing a brisk workout. "I like this job even though it's the toughest one I've ever had. There's only one way to stay here—by winning—and we'll cause some trouble in this league."

Confabs Set For Chicago; Minors Meet

Landis to Attempt To Get Definite Statement From Here On Game's Future

By the United Press

Chicago, Oct. 14.—Baseball's wartime future—both in the majors and the minor leagues—likely will be settled in a series of meetings scheduled in Chicago December 1-4.

In quick succession today dates for the all-important diamond sessions were set. The American and National League meetings are scheduled December 1-2, the joint session of the majors December 3 and the confab of the minors on December 4.

The major league meetings originally were scheduled for New York and the minor league convention for Minneapolis. They were transferred to a more centrally located point in an effort to ease the transportation difficulties of diamond officials.

Operation of baseball leagues in 1943, naturally, is subject to Government approval. Play went ahead last season after President Roosevelt's famed "green light" letter to Baseball Commissioner Kenesaw M. Landis. It is expected that before the December meetings here Landis or some other high official will attempt to get from Washington a new and still more definite statement of the policy that may be pursued.

Contributed To Relief

Last season major league clubs each contributed receipts from a special day to Army and Navy relief funds. A portion of the World Series receipts went to the United Service Organizations. If the majors continue to operate this financial support of war relief agencies likely will be expanded. The manner and extent of these donations probably will be discussed at the joint meeting.

The financial plan of the World Series was entirely the work of Landis and he likely will take the lead in formulating the plan for the regular season. The commissioner has been vacationing in Michigan since the close of the series but probably will return to his office some time next week.

If baseball again is given a governmental "go ahead," the chief task of the majors becomes transportation. Last season clubs traveled in chartered Pullman cars. A recent order of the Office of Civilian Defense prohibits use of special cars for athletic teams.

Want Shorter Schedule

William Harridge, president of the American League, said recently a poll of club officials indicated sentiment favoring a shorter schedule. That likely will be one of the important issues to be discussed at the league sessions. Proponents of a curtailed program advocate a 140-game schedule in place of the current 154-game season. They would open one week later than usual and close a week earlier.

While baseball men generally are optimistic as to the future of the majors, the outlook is far different in the minors. Only larger minors are expected to survive. Most observers are of the opinion that circuits with less than a class A rating are doomed.

Selective Service calls and gas rationing have, and will be felt more keenly by the minors than the majors.

Another factor against the minors is that players sales this year were far below normal because of the unwillingness of major league clubs to gamble on performers who might be bound for military service.

Colonials' Coach Baker Warned of Undermanned Furman

Southerners Boast Good Ball Carriers

Only 22 Players Make Trip Here For Tomorow's Game at Park

George Washington coach Johnny Baker has been warned not to take Furman's Purple Hurricane lightly tomorrow night just because the South Carolinians are bringing only 22 men to town.

The Furman squad is small in numbers but packs no dead wright. Coach "Dizzy" McLeod has 22 capable gridders, only one reserve for each position but enough to get by barring any serious injuries.

Dewey Proctor and Jim Barnett are the aces of a good running attack and in a 14-6 defeat by Wake Forest last week Furman's fast ground gainers posted three separate runs of 45, 55 and 82 yards from scrimmage.

Baker has been cautioning the G. W. squad against letting the fleet Carolonians get out into the open. He used that for a topic yesterday as the Colonial squad was confined to the gymnasium as both Griffith Stadium and the Memorial Field were under water.

The Colonials were strengthened for tomorrow night's 8:15 encounter as Frank Seno wired from his Mendota, Ill., home that his draft board did not want him immediately and he hoped to finish out the season.

Furman, which works from a double wing variation, always gives an interesting ball game. G. W. lost down there last year, 13-6.

Coach Baker particularly wants to get by this game before the Colonials hit five major foes in succession starting next week. Furman has lost three straight games, but to major opposition, and the game looms as a toss-up.

Arnovich Suffers Severe Right Arm Injuries at Camp

By the Associated Press

Tacoma, Oct. 14.—Pvt. Morrie Arnovich, former star outfielder for the New York Giants and the Philadelphia Nationals, suffered severe injuries to his right arm today. He slipped in a shower at nearby Fort Lewis and plunged the arm through a window glass. He was taken to the Army base hospital.

The arm was badly cut, especially the forearm where about 12 stitches had to be taken.

Army physicians said his condition was good but that it was too early to predict how the injury would affect his ball-playing career.

Freddie Cochrane, Welter Champion, Marries Model

By the Associated Press

Elizabeth, N. J., Oct. 14.—Welterweight Champion Freddie "Red" Cochrane, 27, of Hillside was matched for life today, with attractive Miss Beatrice Milano, also 27 and a New York model.

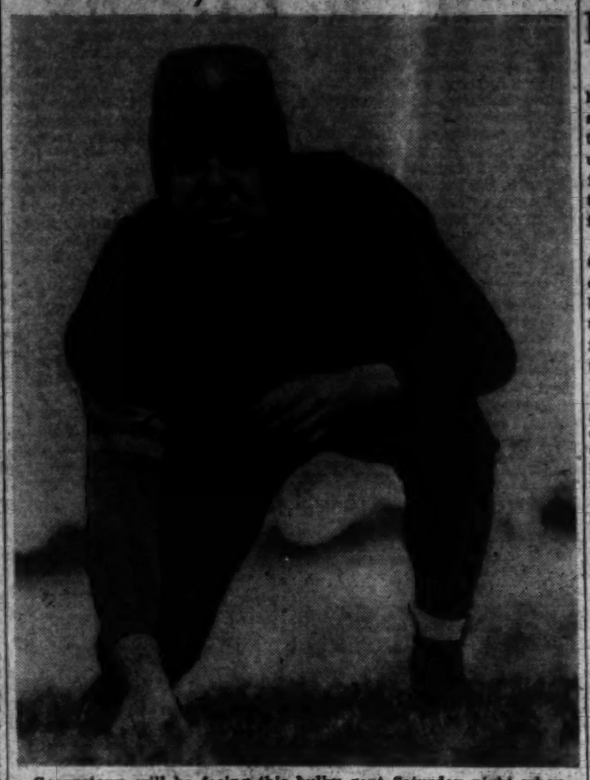
Police Judge John L. McGuire performed the marriage ceremony in his offices. Cochran and his bride met for the first time a year ago.

After the ceremony Cochran, now a specialist, first class, in the United States Navy, said he would leave within a few hours to return to active duty. He won his title from Fritzie Zivic, Pittsburgh, July 29, 1941, in Newark. He joined the Navy in August.

Stage Long Session

New York, Oct. 14. (AP).—Coach Lou Little put his Columbia football squad through a long session of light contact scrimmage today, featuring offensive maneuvers which might work against the Army defense and a defensive setup to stop Army plays Saturday.

Auburn, G. U.'s Saturday Foe, Has Plenty of Travel Trouble



Georgetown will be facing this bulky gent Saturday night when it opposes Auburn at Griffith Stadium. He is Louis Chateau, 205-pound tackle

Alabamans Would Have Fared Better With Kiddy Cars on Florida Trip

College football teams are running the gamut of travel difficulties this year but Auburn, Georgetown's Saturday night foe in Griffith Stadium, seems to be setting the pace.

When the Alabama gridders, always one of the travelingest teams in the Nation, went to New Orleans where they upset Tulane, 27-13, they rode up Canal Street in a bakery truck at the completion of their journey.

Last week when they went to Gainesville and were upset, 6-0, by Florida they really ran into trouble. Previous difficulties with coach travel in trips to Georgia tech and New Orleans had shied the Auburn team away from railways so they contracted to make the 750-mile trip to Florida by rented cars.

At the last minute someone realized they would have to go through a gas-rationing zone so the trip was made even longer, to skirt it. They sent the equipment by train and were to stop in Valdosta for a workout. The equipment was unloaded but the players did not arrive until 9 p. m. and so the uniforms were useless.

In reloading the uniforms, they were put on a later train and just reached Gainesville a short time before the kickoff. For a while the game threatened to be cancelled. After that ride and the delays and difficulties, Auburn did not feel much like playing football—which they didn't. They were never inside Florida's 28-yard line.

According to reports, the Alabama Poly gridders are traveling to Washington in comparative luxury and scheduled to arrive sometime tomorrow. Scheduled, that is.

With an upset victory over Tulane and defeats at the hands of Georgia Tech and Florida, Auburn is still something of an unknown quantity. They have eight seniors on the squad and a triple-threat back, Roy Gafford, who is reported to be one of the best in the South. Their line will spot the heavy Hoyas considerable poundage.

Judging by pass requests, an unfailing barometer of football attendance, Saturday's arc light affair will draw the top college crowd of the season. Georgetown has yet to receive just dues with an unbeaten record against three major foes but if they can come through against Auburn the Hoyas should climb into the national limelight.

Ban Oberto may start at guard in place of Bus Werder for Coach Jack Hagerty and John Morelli may replace Tom Ponsalle.

Brownie Winner Of Chicago Race

Chicago, Oct. 14 (AP).—Joe W. Brown's Brownie outgamed Topnard in the final yards to take a photo finish victory in the Berwyn Purse at Hawthorne today, Cherry Trifle was third.

Brownie, with Eric Guerin aboard took the lead at the start. Well down the stretch Brownie started to bear out as Topnard appeared to take a slight lead. But Guerin quickly straightened out Brownie and the colt came again to win.

The winner's price was $4.60 and the time for a mile and 70 yards was a good 1:24 2/5.

Maryland's Grid Squad Forced Indoors

Coach Clark Shaughnessy took his University of Maryland grid squad indoors yesterday, hopeful that the rainy weather would let up before the weekend and not force his unbeaten Terps to meet their first real test on a muddy field.

Tommy Mont, Jack Wright, and Co. have been accomplishing wonders with the T-formation to date but a muddy ball is a tough thing to handle from Shaughnessy's pet formation and particularly with a team that was just introduced to the "T" this year.

The Terps will leave tomorrow afternoon for Lexington and Saturday's first Southern Conference date with V. M. I. The squad will travel by train to Staunton, Va., and take a bus to Lexington.

The Terps' traveling squad of 33 is in its best physical condition of the year and is all set for the game which may be the turning point of the season. The Keydets have played Clemson to a tie, lost to Temple by a single point and routed the University of Virginia.

Maryland has met nothing of V. M. I.'s caliber in its paperweight schedule to date. Connecticut was a pushover and the week after the Terps beat Lakehurst, 14-0, the University of Delaware defeated the Sailors, 20 to 7, which gives an indication of the latter's strength. Rutgers does not figure to cause much trouble even in the Middle Three this year.

The Terps meet Florida and Duke later in the season but V. M. I. stacks up as the team which is likely to steer Maryland's course for the rest of the season. Any team with Joe Muha is a tough one to get by.

Two Wrestlers, Referee File Suit Against Film Firm

By International News Service

Los Angeles, Oct. 14.—Two wrestlers and a referee claimed today they are not funny.

They made the claim in a $100,000 suit they filed against Columbia Pictures Corp., which, they said, made them look funny in a movie.

The trio, wrestlers Ali Baba and Hardboiled Haggerty and Referee Pat McKee, said movies taken of them in action in San Bernardino, Calif., in 1939, were used in a short that made them and the wrestling business look funny. This, they said, tended to hurt their incomes.

Flying Easy Wins Jamaica Race; Taunt Is Second

By the Associated Press

Jamaica Race Track, N. Y., Oct. 14. — Favorite followers in the crowd of 11,054 had their troubles here this afternoon. They suffered their fifth reverse in as many races decided when the W-L Ranch's Taunt had to play second fiddle to J. C. Ellis' Flying Easy in the featured Lady Valentine Purse, a 6-furlong test for fillies and mares.

Aberdeen Stable's Sun Ginger was third, four lengths away. The well played Yarrow Maid, which recently ran over a smart field at Belmont Park, where the stretch is longer and the turns less sharp, wound up a belated fourth. Flying Easy paid $11.30 and was timed in 1:12 3-5.

Dukes' Playing Style Baffles Opposition

By the Associated Press

Pittsburgh, Oct. 14.—Aldo (Buff) Donelli, whose baffling Duquesne Dukes boast a 16-game winning streak and 26 triumphs in 28 games, today credited the Dukes' victory sweep to an attack "based on the idea nobody's got the ball."

The Dukes, whose football magic has befuddled three hapless foes already this season, get one of their hardest tests this Saturday against North Carolina's Tarheels at Chapel Hill, N. C., in a game scheduled only last night.

"Everybody thinks we're trying to fool 'em," said Donelli, one-time internationally known soccer star. "But we're not."

"We simply use our deception at top speed, with as little motion in the backfield as possible," he explained. "A great many coaches say the soundest deception is in slow ball handling, with hand fakes to make the other fellow think someone's got the ball.

"But it's just the opposite with us. We utilize every bit of speed in our backfield and base our attack on the idea that no body's got the ball. We want opposing linemen to wonder who's got it, and not guess. As long as they think we're fooling 'em, we'll win our ball games."

Uses T-Formation

Donelli's attack basically is the Notre Dame "box," but he is using the "T" formation more this year. He has his own variation of the "man in motion," in which both that player and the other halfback handle the ball equally as much.

The 35-year-old coach says his team "isn't one of stars," adding "we've had a lot of boys who wouldn't have been regulars on other teams. But they're great team players."

The Dukes have been rolling along at a spectacular clip since midway of the 1940 season, when Mississippi dumped them 14-6. That was the last Duquesne defeat, and, coupled with a 10-10 tie with the University of Detroit in 1939, is the only blur on a record that rates as one of the finest in the Nation.

Included are victories over such teams as Pitt, Marquette, Villanova, St. Mary's, Carnegie Tech (when Bill Kern had the Skiboy up), Mississippi, North Carolina, Mississippi State and Holy Cross.

At the season's end maybe the Dukes may have run their streak through 23 contests. At least Buff is aiming in that direction.

Alsab and Shut Out Given Pound More Than Race Scale

By the Associated Press

Jamaica Race Track, Oct. 14.—Handicapper J. B. Campbell, in his weights for the $15,000 added, mile and five furlong Gallant Fox Handicap, rates the 3-year-old Alsab and Shut Out 1 pound better by the scale than the 4-year-old Whirlaway for the fixture scheduled to be run here October 21.

The weights, released today, show Whirlaway actual topweight under 130 pounds, or 4 over the weight for age scale, while Alsab and Shut Out received 124 apiece, 5 over scale. However, Shut Out, the Greentree Stable star, is the only one of the trio expected to start, as Alsab is slated to go next in the Pimlico Special October 28 and Whirlaway is a potential candidate for the Washington Handicap at Laurel October 24.

Navy Soccer Team Blanks Gettysburg, 4-0

By the Associated Press

Annapolis, Md., Oct. 14.—Scoring a goal a period, Navy's debut 1942 soccer squad blanked Gettysburg's Bullets, 4 to 0, today in opening their eight-game schedule.

The contest was less than two minutes old when Capt. Gordy Ochenrider, a Navy lacrosse star, dribbled furiously down the field and dumped the ball into the net for the initial score.

With nine minutes of the second canto under way, Ochenrider booted a pass to Johnny Swank and the Navy outside right put it away for the first of two goals he tallied during the game.

Swank's second came in the third period on an assist by Bill Chaires, inside right. Then Chaires made a spectacular tally on a ball off Cliff Lowe's chest to give the Middies their final goal in the last quarter.

Gettysburg attempted several rallies but Navy's goalie, Bob Strassle, turning in some dazzling saves, kept the Bullets safely at bay.

Navy's Plebes made it a double Sailor triumph, whitewashing the Gettysburg Frosh, 3 to 0, in another game.

New York, Oct. 14 (AP).—The New York Giants today announced the purchase of Kenneth Trinkle, right-handed pitcher, from Baltimore of the International League.

Trinkle, who'll be 23 years old in December, won 15 and lost 13 with the Orioles last season.

Coach Sends Middies Through Tough Drill

Comdr. Welchel Looking for More Punch From Navy Backs; Play Yale Saturday

By the Associated Press

Annapolis, Md., Oct. 14.—Comdr. John E. Whelchel sent his Navy gridders through another intensive scrimmage today in preparation for Saturday's tussle with Yale at Baltimore, the biggest game—from an attendance standpoint—the sailors have yet attempted.

Striving to kindle a spark which would transform Navy's impotent attack of the Princeton contest into something with more wallop, Whelchel gave the pigskin to his first-string backs and ordered them to tie into the third-stringers for a full 60 minutes. The second squad went on defense against the "B" eleven and did its best to fathom Yale plays.

Earlier today, Lieut. Comdr. Morris Gilmore, U. S. N. (retired), Navy Athletic Association official in charge of the sailors' ticket sales, reported that almost as many persons would see the Yale game in Baltimore's Municipal Stadium as already had witnessed Navy's first three encounters.

Gilmore said returns from the advance ticket sale indicated a "brisk" business and that Navy's largest single crowd of the young season seems assured already. Planning for upward of 40,000 fans, Gimore said game ducats would be available at Navy's 30 Baltimore agencies for the balance of the week.

In Navy's first three games, the sailors have played before approximately 47,000 persons, with last weekend's 25,000 turnout at New York the biggest crowd to date. In two Annapolis games, the Middies attracted 22,000 with William & Mary and Virginia as opponents.

Women's Golf Play Postponed 'Til Today

Elkridge Captures $5000 Gov. Ogle 'Chase at Laurel

Kent Miller Jumper Wins By 8 Lengths

By Walter Haight
A Staff Correspondent

Laurel, Md., Oct. 14.—Looking all the part of one of Kipling's "flying fishes," Kent Miller's Elkridge splashed along and skipped over 13 fences to win the twelfth running of the $5000 Governor Ogle Steeplechase, topping the Wednesday program. The 4-year-old son of Mate and Best by Test came home eight lengths in front of his closest rival in a field of five. The Rokeby Stables' Redlands was the distant second and had a six-length margin of his own over Mrs. Van Lear Black's Strolling On. The lone mishap of the race came at the tenth fence when L. B. Mayer's veteran, Ossabaw, landed unsteady and tossed off his rider.

Winner of $27,925 before he marched postward today, Elkridge added $3300 to those earnings and made amends for an accident that eliminated him from the Grand National at Belmont. Due to conditions, the time was the slowest at the present route, the son of Mate being clocked in 4:18.6, more than 28 seconds over the track record for the "about 2 miles" set by Ahmisk at this meeting.

The field was away in good alignment, but all the jockeys apparently decided to feel out the course the first time around and the field went along as if it were going to a hunt instead of running in a $5000 handicap. Montpelier's Rouge Dragon went to the front early simply because the other boys would not set the pace. After eight fences, Ossabaw was first to shows signs of life. He was moved to the inside of Rouge Dragon and the pair ran head and head to the backstretch.

Approaching the tenth fence, Elkridge began to move. It was at this jump that Ossabaw was eliminated. Rouge Dragon also went out of contention at this stage by tiring and Elkridge, fencing boldly, took command. Redlands tried to stay with the ultimate winner but lost his chance when he made a poor landing at the twelfth fence. From that point to the wire it was "no contest" as far as Elkridge was concerned.

Elkridge, one of the five best jumpers in the Nation, was a favorite with the small crowd of 4500 and paid a $5.10 mutuel.

Selections at Laurel

Dear Al:

Coldstream Stable's Attendant, one of the better juveniles of the season, has been sent here by Trainer Jack Howard for Saturday's Spalding Lowe Jenkins. Irish Jimmy Stewart will look after Attendant, son of The Porter and Barbara, pending Howard's arrival later in the week. Trainer Ralph Watts reports his leg very sore following an accident in the paddock while saddling Guerilla. Watts was kicked by Guerilla but didn't consider the bump seriously at the time. Italian Harry and High Arch have been added to the list of horses the stewards require an Okay on before being permitted to race again. Humphrey Finney, field secretary of the Maryland Horse Breeders Association has posted a notice in the secretary's office here calling attention of horsemen to the annual fall sales at Timonium on November 2-3 at which breeding stock, yearlings and horses in training will be offered. Agent Jimmy Swisher reports that Apprentice Jockey Jimmy Thornburg is improving rapidly now and is expected to leave Doctors Hospital in Washington by the end of the week. Trainer B. Frank Christmas got in from New York where he has been campaigning his string of horses. Jockey Willie Gillespie reported he was suffering from a severe cold and canceled his engagements for the day. Jockey Johnny Deering is scheduled to reach Laurel Friday from New York and probably will remain in Maryland for the rest of the fall season. Although several long shots have scored in recent days, the percentage of winning favorites remains close to normal, a check showing that 33 have scored in 104 races for a mark of 31 per cent. The Maryhorsemen's Protective Association will hold its annual dinner meeting in the clubhouse here this evening, immediately following the conclusion of the day's sport. See you on the rail.

BILL.

First race—PICKWICK ARMS appears well placed in this field. Needs only the right handling. PROPOSE should be better than that last. The Nydrie-Jones entry of SENATE and HAWK deserves some attention.

Second race—STEEL BEAM needs only to run back to that last to take the main portion of this purse. CHOP STICKS turned in a fair effort recently and will be a threat. NICK is a possibility in rough going.

Third race—ROUGH GOING and DOLLAR SIGN are a tight fit in this field. I prefer them in the order named. STURDY DUKE faltered when looking all the part of the winner last out. If patched up this one might take it all.

Fourth race—LIGHT OF MORN may take the top from the No. 1 post position and make every post a winning one. I'm going to string along. SELMALAD and BLOWING WIND to fill out the money bracket.

Fifth race—SWABIA is tossed into this with feather weight. Comes here fit and should like the going. VINTAGE PORT comes off a longer race but is due respect. DAWN ATTACK to take care of the others.

Sixth race—BRIGHT REMARK, from the Bradley Stable, turned in a good effort last out and will be hard to whip in this company. EDIE JANE had trouble early in that recent outing and belongs close. LEGATION for the minor money.

Seventh race—DINGMANS gets my call in this field. QUINTILLIAN is good now and will be a factor. COUNT MAURICE'S last was a beaut.

Eighth race—PHONE DIJON took command and led all the way earlier in the week. Might do it again in this field. CITY JUDGE is getting good again and belongs close. TANGANYIKA is a possible wake-up.

Best bet—Swabia.

Governali Leads Nation's College Gridmen on Offensive

Columbia's Star Peer As Passer

603 Yards Gained By Aerials; Ruman, Fisher Outstanding; Ray Evans Shines

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Oct. 14.—Columbia's Paul Governali is long on passing and short on rushing—but he doesn't have to worry about his ground game. The crinkly-haired Lions star has ben throwing a football virtually as far as anyone else propels it by running and passing combined.

The American Football Statistical Bureau reported today that Governali had gained 74 yards by rushing and 603 by passing in three games for a total advance of 677 yards—by far the best offensive showing in the Nation.

In fact only two players have surpassed Governali's passing yardage through their rushing and aerial efforts combined. They are Bob Ruman of Arizona, with a total of 609 yards, and Dick Fisher of Iowa Navy, with 604.

Governali was in top form last Saturday as Columbia was bowing to Brown, 28 to 21. Pitchin' Paul personally clicked for 223 yards while the rest of his teammates could muster only 61. Governali threw passes for all three Columbia touchdowns.

The only player offering arguments about Governall's passing supremacy was Ray Evans of Kansas. The Jayhawker ace has completed 48 passes in four games to Paul's 32 in three games, but Evans' percentage of completions and his total of yards gained are both well below Governali's efforts.

Mobley, Griffin Lead

While Governali, Ruman and Fisher dominate the total offense listings and Governali and Evans set the pace in passing, unheralded Rudolph (Little Doc) Mobley of Hardin-Simmons and Dom Griffin of Illinois' surprising team stole the honors in individual rushing.

Mobley in three games has charged 434 yards. He scored the touchdown by which Hardin-Simmons defeated Southern Methodist last Saturday. Griffin, after comparatively soft going against two weak foes, had more trouble against Minnesota last week, but still added to his total yardage to run it up to 394 as the Illini defeated the Gophers.

Lee Roy Pietz of Pennsylvania enjoyed a scant margin over Tom Douglas of Dartmouth as the nation's punting leader. In 12 boots Pietz has averaged 47.5 yards to 47 even for the Dartmouth kicker. Bobby Cifers of Tennessee was in the No. 3 position with a 46.8-yard average.

Capitalizing on the passing ability of his Kansas teammate, Evans, Otto Schnellbacker of the Jayhawks forged in front as the leading pass receiver. In four games he has nabbed 14 aerials for 210 yards. Cullen Rogers of Texas A. and M. also has snared 14 passes but has made only 162 yards.

Musto Meets Lou Brooks In Baltimore

By the Associated Press

Baltimore, Oct. 14.—Tony Musto, big, roungh Chicago battler who is very much in the heavyweight picture, will tangle with Lou Brooks, Wilmington Negro, in the windup 10-rounder Monday night at the Century Athletic Club.

Musto fought here twice before, and what happened on those occasions didn't swell his prestige any. He lost to Buddy Walker and Red Burman after putting on sterling exhibitions. His stock took an upward bound when he annexed a victory over Lee Savold, the Des Moines scrapper. He later lost a return match.

Musto's opponent is also no stranger to the Baltimore ring, having engaged in seven Coliseum frays and losing only one. Joey Maxim, the young Cleveland scrapper, turned the trick.

a superiority in reserves over his Brooklyn club but felt on a man-to-man comparison the Dodgers had the 11 best men. He was probably leaving Sammy Baugh out. Of last Sunday's game, Hargiss said the Redskins passing set up the running attack, making them look better than they were as its usually the other way around.

While a half-dozen of the Redskins nursed minor hurts last wek, Brooklyn also was below its top physical condition.

Pug Manders played 59 minutes, although he had taken a beating in the previous game with Detroit. He had a badly bruised side. Center Tom Robertson had a bangedup elbow and Perry Schwartz had spent several days in bed with a bad cold. Eddie Rucinski had two teeth knocked out in the Detroit game and was the victim of a dentist's hurry-up job.

The above are all expected to be ready for the Redskins, but Bruiser Kinard turned up with a swollen ankle yesterday. Injuries are usually overlooked by the Bruiser, however, as he will play if humanly possible.

The Redskins will leave Saturday afternoon at 4 o'clock after a brief morning workout.

Newton, Mass., Oct. 14 (AP).—Boston College's hopes for an upset win over North Carolina Prefight's Cloudbusters slumped today when it became evident that Eddie Doherty, veteran quarterback, would be unavailable for Saturday's game.

Doherty, who has been hampered by a leg injury, aggravated it against Clemson last week and it has failed to respond to treatment. His place has been taken over by Walt Boudreau, his alternate the last two seasons.

Harvard Holds Punting Drills

Cambridge, Mass., Oct. 14 (AP).—A long kicking drill and a dummy scrimmage against the scrubs, who demonstrated Dartmouth plays, today used up most of the Harvard varsity football team's practice session.

Capt. Don Forte, who had his first contact work yesterday since fracturing a bone in his leg a month ago, remained on the sidelines, as did three William and Mary casualties—Center Jack Fisher, Guard Sid Smith and Halfback Jack Comeford.

Minnesota Zips Through Practice

Silovich took care of most of the passing and kicking while regular Bill Daley jogged around the field with a sore back and a few other minor bruises. Daley missed Monday's drill but after a heat treatment today he was able to don his uniform for a little running.

Entries Still Flow in for Table Tennis

The Washington Post-Chevy Chase Ice Palace Government employes table tennis affair slated to start Saturday with preliminaries scheduled for 3 in the afternoon continues to draw the interest of Uncle Sam's paddle pushers if receipt of new entries in each mail is a basis of judgment.

The tourney commencing Saturday is the third consecutive year the event has been staged with The Post cooperating with the Ice Palace, the mammoth affair open only to those who toil for Uncle Sam or who may be in the armed services. With separate draws for novice, advanced or experienced players, each participant has every chance of winning in his or her classification.

Entry fee for the event is 50 cents with men and women in uniform paying but half price. An international flavor is given the tournament by the announcement that men and women in uniform belonging to any of the United Nations may also enter at the reduced fee.

The preliminaries start at 3 o'clock Saturday with quarter-finals to begin at 8 that night. Semifinals and finals are for the corresponding hours on Sunday. The coupon appearing on this page should be filled in and dispatched to the Ice Palace so that advance draws may be made in order that waiting time be cut to a minimum. The entry fee allows the contestent plenty of practice periods as well as additional play even though eliminated in early rounds.

Davis, Stribling To Headline Turner Bouts

Al Davis, the Brooklyn welterweight who is attempting a comeback, has been signed to fight Ken Stribling, up-and-coming young District colored scrapper, on next Monday night's boxing show at Turner's Arena.

Davis, who became the Peck's Bad Boy of fistcuffing as a result of assaulting both Fritzie Zivic and the referee in a title bout in Madison Square Garden two years ago, made his bow at the arena a few weeks ago, stopping Manuel Rosa, of Baltimore.

The New York boy was so impressive that Promoter Joe Turner kept right on the path of his manager, Lew Burston, and yesterday closed out for his appearance against Stribling in an eight-rounder.

Stribling, winner of eight straight, kayoed Roy Dunn, former A. A. U. champion, last summer at the ball park, and otherwise has shown himself to be a fighter of considerable promise.

District and Nearby Bowling Comment

A word or two about the "Pop" Wolfe event at College Park and Hyattsville Recreation last Sunday. We have overheard not one but numerous criticisms as to its handling; that a number had to wait an hour or more to get on shifts and others were told to be on hand at a certain time and then were held up considerably before being able to bowl.

Frankly, we haven't had an opportunity of checking due to a number of valid reasons, but with Arville Ebersole in complete charge of the affair we think perhaps duckpinners may have become impatient or that some other reason (lack of experienced pinsetters for one) may have been the underlying cause. Duckpinners this season may as well resign themselves to inexperienced pinsetters in the main, so due to war conditions that is hardly a valid excuse for a bowler's ire. Ebersole is a past master at handling a tournament and getting it off on time. But perhaps the boys were held up an unconscioable period for some reason other tournament officials were responsible for. If explanations are in line perhaps Ebersole will drop a line to "Duckpin Data" giving the details for inclusion in next week's column.

Our paragraph on pingirls (hereafter we are calling them "pinettes"), apparently struck pay dirt with the very first sentence for Takoma Recreation, Clarendon and Cofonial Village are using colored girls with all three managers training new ones as fast as possible. The payoff is that the classified ads asking for pinettes are producing an avalanche of interested girls, while those asking for men pinsetters are falling on barren ground. To our way of thinking girls would make ideal pinsetters and every day they work is a direct contribution to the war effort for the men are needed for sterner stuff. The pinettes may or may not fill the shoes of the men in bowling, but here's a tribute to them for trying and a request to bowlers—particularly the "experts"—for compassion and patience.

Aside to Hugh Arbaugh: The women patronizing your alleys don't care for the smell of frying onions at your lunch counter. Thank you.

George Huguely's Bethesdans looked like a team of decrepid hasbeens last Sunday night in their debut against Bob Davidson's Recreation Center five. In the most expensive inaugural ever used in metropolitan Washington for the introduction of a bowling team, the Bethesdans' bark was always far worse than their bite. Everybody but El Geib was off and he wasn't up to his usual excellent standard. All dressed up and with no where to go (the Bethesdans' natty new ensemble cost close to $25 a copy) the doughty team impersonated the Friendship class in any church league. Using up nearly a hundred bucks of radio time and installing new seating arrangements, etc., for such an inaugural were not a waste of money, however, as the 250 spectators got their money's worth, as all saw the match for free. Seriously speaking, the affair was a success in that it showed the possibilities which exist in publicizing a bowling match, and George aguely is deserving of compliments for stepping out and doing something different. And maybe the lions won't just roar next Sunday night when a return match will be rolled at Recreation Center, Baltimore. Those spectators bringing their own gas may accompany the team.

Perce Eliett, new secretary of the Washington City, is already beating the drum for the Howard Campbell tournament scheduled for Sunday, Oct. 25. It's a 15-game affair, you know, with five games to be bowled in each of three maple plants in the order named: Brookland, Lucky Strike and Convention Hall. It starts at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, moves to Lucky at 5 and to the Hall at 9. Entry fee is $28 (which keeps the upstarts out) and first prize of $300 is guaranteed. We were in Lou Jenkins' corner last year when he won it; now he's in our corner rolling 'em for Uncle Sam. He'll help win it, too* We miss Lou, don't we, Ethel?

Terrors Lose Joe Kugler For a Week

By the Associated Press

Westminster, Md., Oct. 14. Coach Roy Byham's feelings are mixed as he runs his Western Maryland football team through practices for Saturday's encounter with Mount St. Mary's College.

He is pleased by the progress the boys made during the past three weeks, especially as evidenced in last Saturday's 7 to 0 victory over Boston University, but the gloom settles thick and fast when he remembers that Joe Kugler, the giant starting tackle, will be out of action for about a week because of an injury sustanied in the Beantown tussle.

The line has shown particularly well in workouts, Byham said, with Bernee Gugesky and Dick Koester at the flanks being just about what the doctor ordered as defensive players.

Subs or Headliners, It's All The Same to Daddy Jim Londos

The immortal "Jeemy" Londos proved to some 2000 fans at Turner's Arena last night that he is still the top man of wrestling when he defeated Gino Garibaldi after 33 minutes of the main event. The champion, who claims nary a defeat since he won the somewhat ambiguous title from Bronko Nagurski in Philadelphia, November 18, 1938, used a crotch hold, a pair of body slams and a press to best the Italian.

Garibaldi was substituting for Johnny Long, and thereby hangs a tale, Long, the Baltimore shipyard worker, has been given the customary build-up for the past several months. Last week it was announced that he had at last attained the inner circle of the Monetary Muscle Men; he was to joust with Londos.

The sports page carried the announcement of the match and mentioned that it was to be for the Gorgeous Greek's crown. Long was even quoted to the effect that here was the golden opportunity of his career.

Last night at the appointed hour Long was very conspicuous by his absence and Promoter Joe Turner was, to put it mildly frantic. He confided to friends he suspected sabotage by a rival beef trust.

At long last, with the crowd impatient at being fed a 15-minute exhibition match while the management prayed, there came a telegram from Long. It was filed from York, Pa., and confessed that our hero had caught the wrong train out of Baltimore.

The fans were informed of Long's error and Garibaldi, who had been held out of an earlier bout, was run on in his place.

Garibaldi started rough, slugging Londos as they broke holds, and made a good show of it. Strangely enough, the majority of the house was rooting for the contender.

Even Beginning

Garibaldi more than held his own in the earlier phases of the match, and employed an efficient body scissors that downed the champion twice for a two-count. However, he began to weaken just past the half-hour mark when Londos effectively clamped with a leglock. Several times Garibaldi escaped by going out of bounds, but Londos finally caught him with a crotch hold and followed quickly with the slams and a press to end another successful title defense.

Ronny Etchison was awarded a decision when Michele Leone was disqualified after 13½ minutes for booting the referee. Benny Shapiro bested Johnny Vanski in 14 with a corkscrew leglock, and Fred Grobmier and Joe Millich drew in a 15-minute exhibition. Earlier, Millich beat Jack LaRue with a body press in 19.

Montgomery G. O. P. Woos Democrats

Montgomery County Democrats have been extended an invitation to attend the Republican rally at the Kensington Armory Friday night, according to Peter F. Snyder of Silver Spring, Md., chairman of the rally committee.

In a letter to G. O. P. workers this week, Chairman Snyder said, "As you know, thousands of registered Democrats will vote with us and for us on November 3. Invite them to the rally, but do not press them. Many of them have reasons—and good reasons—for not attending. Respect their position and their feelings."

In a later statement, Snyder explained, "All reports received to date indicate that the Republican and Independent candidates, and the Charter nominees as well, will have magnificent support from voters who are registered Democrats, but who, for fear of the crackdowns of the Lee machine, dare not make known their position or their purposes. These people are remembering many things the organization would like them to forget. We are not urging them to speak out or to show their feelings by public action. Rather, we are reminding them that when the voting machine curtains are closed, no one need know which levers they pull.

Shostakovich's Seventh Fails To Fill Hall at $11 a Seat

By John Selby
Associated Press Staff Writer

New York, Oct. 14.—The most publicized of modern conductors and the most publicized of modern symphonies tonight were unable in combination to fill New York's Carnegie Hall. Partly this was because single seats on the lower floor sold for $11. Partly it was because word had got about that the symphony was too long for its somewhat meager musical content.

Arturo Toscanini was the conductor, starting the second and last of his weeks with the Philharmonic-Symphony Society. The symphony was Dmitri Shostakovich's seventh, the siege of Leningrad, object of what has been called the biggest "build-up" given any serious music in history.

Toscanini lowered his own time record with the work a few minutes. Tonight it filled 66 minutes of playing time in its first New York concert performance. On the radio several weeks ago it took about 10 minutes longer.

The Rusian composer's symphony was first reported as being born amid the shelling and siege of Leningrad. Next it turned up as the object of rivalry among the world's conductors. Then it was announced that Shostakovich had decreed a Russian premiere, and that was staged March 1 of this year.

Came the dramatic journey out of Russia on microfilm, 252 pages of music condensed into a tin box you could carry in your pocket. A half-dozen American conductors were hopeful, but on July 19 Toscanini and the NBC Symphony gave the American premiere. The following month Serge Koussevitzky played the first American concert performance with his student orchestra at Tanglewood in the Berkshires. Then tonight's version.

There was applause at the conclusion. But there was probably more excitement after the "Star Spangled Banner" which ended the concert. It was among the most dramatic performances of the National Anthem New York has heard.

Before the concert the orchestra cabled its greetings and praise of the "great people" of Russia to Shostakovich.

Mrs. James Cope has been appointed chairman of the rationing committee, a new group which will be composed of mothers who will obtain volunteers among the membership to assist teachers in the rationing programs throughout the year. Other committee chairmen appointed are Mrs. Jackson Lusby, ways and means, and Mrs. Samuel Bledsoe, publicity.

The association voted Tuesday to dispense with the November meeting. Gov. Herbert R. O'Conor and Maryland's two Democratic United States Senators, Millard E. Tydings and George L. Radcliffe, will be the principal speakers at three Democratic rallies to be held in Montgomery County next Wednesday, it was announced yesterday.

Because of the tire and gasoline shortage, campaign chairmen have decided to hold rallies in various parts of the county the same evening so that the speakers and candidates may visit all three meetings with a minimum of travel.

Governor O'Conor will speak at 7 p. m. in the Rockville High School auditorium and will proceed immediately to the second meeting at the Bethesda-Chevy Chase Senior High School which will start at 8 p. m. The third meeting, to start at 8:30 p. m., will be held in the Silver Spring Armory.

Both Virginia and Maryland likewise showed substantial increases in September sales. A special drive by movie theaters was conducted in September and accounted for a large part of the increase.

Lynch Assails Proposed New Proxy Rules

Representative Lynch (Democrat) of New York, told the House yesterday that new proxy regulations expected to be promulgated today by the Securities and Exchange Commission would "definitely hamper our great industries . . . and stir up strife between stockholders and management."

He said that the proposed proxy provisions "constitute one of the most serious experiments with the Nation's economic structure" and added they apparently were based "upon the premise that dishonesty is the predominant characteristic of American business."

"This is not a typewriter war that will be won by industry supplying multitudinous reports instead of war material to the Government," Lynch said.

"Instead of trying to find ways and means of hampering industry, the SEC should make a patriotic effort to cooperate with industry to the end that unnecessary Government regulations are scrapped."

Bankers to Help Plan for Clearing Ration Coupons

A nationally representative committee of the American Bankers Association has been appointed to work with the Office of Price Administration in devising a workable plan for clearing coupons of the Nation's rationing system through banks, it was announced yesterday.

W. L. Hemingway, president of the A. B. A., said the committee, appointed at the request of Price Administrator Henderson, would collaborate with the OPA in working out a plan that would achieve the Government's objectives and at the same time be practical from the bank operational point of view.

Liberty Ship Building Time Cut to 70 Days

By the Associated Press

It required an average of only 70.1 days to build Liberty ships in September, compared with 83.3 days in August and 241-3 days in January, the Maritime Commission reported yesterday. Sixty-seven were delivered last month.

Original contracts estimated an average of 105 days to build the Liberty ship, the commission's mass production freighter of approximately 10,500 dead weight tons. Last month, eight or ten yards bettered 105 days and the other two made progress toward that goal.

In all, United States shipyards delivered 93 new cargo vessels with a dead weight tonnage of 1,009,800 in September.

The Oregon Shipbuilding Co., Portland, continued to set the pace for Liberty ship builders in September by delivering 11 vessels in an average of 42 days from keel-laying to completion.

California Shipbuilding Corp., Wilmington, ran second with 12 ships delivered in an average of 55.9 days, with the Bethlehem Fairfield Shipyard, Baltimore, in third place with 12 vessels in 56.4 days.

Fighting the War On Trade Front

The Office of Price Administration yesterday rejected the plea of manufacturers of paper products to increase their ceiling prices because the War Production Board restricted and standardized their output.

OPA issued official refusals to the Papyrus Co. Kenilworth, N. J., and the Erving Paper Mills, Erving, Mass., and said it would take similar action on seven other applications.

The firms manufacture such products as decorative crepe paper and paper napkins.

To facilitate the use of wood heat to save fuel oil and coal, Price Administrator Leon Henderson authorized yesterday localized adjustment of price ceilings on cord wood.

In each State, the State price administrator was given authority to fix whatever price is best for that locality on the wood.

Henderson said, "it is hoped that moderate price increases will induce a greater volume of cutting of cord wood by farmers."

The Office of Defense Transportation yesterday exempted livestock, live poultry, and other live animals from its order requiring maximum loading of railroad cars carrying civilian freight. The order becomes effective November 1.

Leo T. Crowley, alien property custodian, announced the seizure of an additional 2600 enemy patents, principally German-owned. Electro-chemical, mechanical, metallurgical chemical, telephone and radio patents were among those seized.

The seizures brought to more than 13,000 the number of enemy-owned patents and applications taken over by Crowley's office.

Treasury, WPB Back Sale Of U. S. Silver to Industry

By the Associated Press

The Treasury recommended yesterday legislation to permit sale to private industry of Government silver stocks not held as backing for silver certificates.

The War Production Board also sanctioned a bill by Senator Green (Democrat) Rhode Island, on condition that sales be subject to WPB's priority powers "so that essential requirements for the war effort can be met."

The Treasury suggested to a Senate Banking subcommittee considering the measure that a clause be inserted providing that the price of silver sold under the act should not be less than 50 cents an ounce. Secretary Morgenthau's letter to the committee said that the average cost of the silver affected was 48.5 cents per ounce.

Green also suggested that the bill, drawn to expire January 1, 1944, be amended to be effective for the duration of the war.

He explained that he had introduced the measure because uses of silver in the war effort—the Government already has permitted nonconsumptive use of some free silver in war industries on a lend-lease basis—had withdrawn it to a large extent from civilian purposes, resulting in a "nearly disastrous" condition in such industries as silverware and manufacturing jewelers.

Not Able to Convert

All these who could, he added, had been trying to convert to war industry, but had expressed hope something could be done to relieve those who could not effect a total conversion.

Small businesses, he said, were particularly affected. He added that the legislation had indorsement of such groups as the Northeastern Manufacturing Jewelers Association, and employe groups.

Howard Boynton, representative of Handy and Harman of New York and Bridgeport, which he described as the "principal supplier of silver in semiprocessed form to American industry," testified in favor of the measure, as did Roy C. Wilcox of Meriden, Conn., president of the Sterling Silversmiths Guild of America.

Boynton said the Green bill would give the Treasury the right to lend 1,168,000,000 ounces of pledged silver for nonconsumption purposes, and release 1,350,000,000 ounces of unpledged silver for sale and consumption, subject to the direction of the WPB.

Use Is Restricted

Domestic silver production which he estimated at about 60 million ounces in 1942 was all, Boynton said, that civilian users now could buy. But because of its higher price, and because the Office of Price Administration would not allow manufacturers to raise the cost of finished goods to cover its additional cost, he said its use in industry was "greatly restricted."

The Green bill, Boynton testified, would permit release of 30 million ounces of silver from the Treasury during 1943 for nonwar purposes.

Boynton said present consumption of silver for war purposes was at the rate of 100 million ounces a year, but was growing to twice that figure.

Thus, he said, the demand for war purposes alone next year would exceed the total available and foreign domestic production—about 175 million ounces combined—by 25 million ounces.

ICC Approves New Haven R. R. Modified Plan

By the Associated Press

The Interstate Commerce Commission approved yesterday a modified reorganization plan for the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Co. under which it will acquire the Boston & Providence Railroad in consideration for $9,974,253 in securities. The plan must become effective during the 1943 calendar year.

The exact date of effectiveness will be fixed by the reorganization committee in accordance with the time when securities can be delivered.

The reorganization was reconsidered by the ICC after having been disapproved by Federal Court, which made suggestions for improving the program.

Among the provisions in the revised plan is one to permit discontinuance of passenger service on the Old Colony Lines if the losses exceed so-called critical figures which were fixed at $850,000 for any consecutive 12 months within the first two years after the plan becomes effective and $500,000 for any consecutive 24 months after the initial two-year period.

Training of New Workers Called Major Problem

New York, Oct. 14 (AP).—The National Association of Manufacturers said today training workers in factories was industry's No. 1 problem in minimizing the Nation's growing manpower deficiency.

"There is no training comparable to the on-the-job production experience, geared to carefully planned job analysis, job breakdown and job instruction," the N. A. M. said.

The organization said the lack of manpower was becoming increasingly acute and pointed out the rise in industrial employment from December, 1841, through July, 1942, was 1,800,000, against a normal increase of 500,000.

"Yet," said the association, "estimates of the Manpower Commission call for the addition of some 5,500,000 from July, 1942, to the end of 1943. Even with intensive training programs for women and youth, it is obvious that the labor market will become increaisngly tight."

Decrease in Leather Output Anticipated

New York, Oct. 14 (AP).—"The scale of leather output during 1941 and the first new months of 1942 cannot be continued without substantial raw material imports," Board Chairman Everett W. Pervere said at today's annual meeting of the Tanners Council of America.

Pervere said the problem also was complicated by the highly specialized nature of tannery equipment and machinery. Said the chairman:

"Conversion to any other purpose is physically impossible short of installing totally new equipment and even conversion to different types of leather is becoming increasingly difficult in view of priorities upon capital equipment."

Steel Output Rises to 100% During Week

By the Associated Press

New York, Oct. 14.—The National effort to collect metal scrap for the Nation's steel mills held top ranking position in the steel industry this week.

Iron Age said in its weekly review:

"Steel production gained a half point to 100 per cent of capacity, the highest mark since the week of last April 30. Since production rates in the earlier part of this year were figured on a somewhat smaller capacity, ingot output is at an all-time high at above 1,700,000 tons for the week.

"With scrap reservoirs rising each day by thousands of tons as a result of the national effort to collect household scrap, variations in the rate of steel production will be watched hereafter by millions of scrap donors, who will have a part, however small, in lifting the rate of capacity.

"Reports to the Iron Age from steel centers show that little of the donated household scrap has yet been melted, since weeks will pass before it arrives at the mills.

"Steel mill purchasing agents are now being required to explain many times daily why they cannot buy scrap collected from public drives. Many cities are endeavoring to sell direct to the mills, apparently not realizing that the scrap collections must be extensively processed before being suitable for open hearth furnace use.

"Emasculation of the much publicized War Materials, Inc., the Government agency organized to salvage scrap beyond ceiling prices, is a discouraging development on the scrap front. At midweek some industrial observers also were concerned lest failure to map out details of the scrap drive beyond the initial collection stage may result in considerable public disillusionment. . . ."

Key Securities Retreat; Gold Issues Mount

By Bernard S. O'Hara
Associated Press Financial Writer

New York, Oct. 14.—Most stock market leaders suffered a minor setback today after the last week's fast forward run but a group of specialties took the ball near the close and pushed into substantially higher territory.

A few of the pivotals slipped off a point or so after a steady start and American Telephone dropped 2. While these moves inspired some general selling the market throughout had resistant spots, notably the steels, aircrafts and oils. Transactions were well under the previous day's.

The fact that selling was held to modest limits while a fair number of stocks attracted higher bids was associated with the more cheerful Wall Street sentiment generated by the favorable tone of war reports over the past several days.

Gold Issues Buoyant

Given a ride in late proceedings were issues of Curtis Publishing, McIntyre Porcupine, Homestake, Dome, and American Rolling Mills. For the gold stocks this was regarded by brokers as a normal rebound after their recent slump on the WPB's order for suspension of production.

The Associated Press 60-stock composite had a closing decline of .2 a point at 39.9. Yesterday's final average was the highest since November 6, 1941. Dealings totaled 660,010 shares against 857,200 Tuesday.

Rails were a bit soft both before and after it was disclosed New York Central directors' meeting produced no dividend, thus disappointing many in the financial sector who had counted on a break in Central's 12-year dividend drought. The stock closed down ¾ on an active turnover.

Bonds Are Lower

Bonds were slightly lower on balance. Commodities were mixed. Chicago wheat finished down ¼ to ¾ of a cent a bushel and corn rose ⅛ to ⅝. Hogs gave up most of an early gain of 10 to 20 cents. Cotton futures climbed 25 to 90 cents a bale.

Curb losers included Aluminum of America, American Cyanamid, International Petroleum, Electric Bond & Share and Penn-Central Airlines. Fractionally higher were Gulf Oil, Lake Shore Mines and Northern States Power "A." Transfers here were 101,745 shares against 124,465 yesterday.

Marshall Asks for Younger and Tougher Army

Gen. George C. Marshall (left), chief of staff, asks the Senate Military Affairs Committee to pass legislation lowering the draft age to 18 so the Army can have younger men "for the toughest possible fighting." Teen-Age Enlistments Jump 50 Per Cent; 13,000 in Group Here

By Roland Nicholson
Post Staff Writer

Johnny Doughboy's younger brother—and in the 18-to-19-year-old bracket he's about 13,000 strong in Washington—is beginning to feel the surge of what Movie Actor John Boles yesterday referred to as "the miracle of America."

While Boles went to the studios of WOL to make a recording for tonight's "Thunder in the Sky" program, and there warned that the Nation's newfound spirit eventually would grind the enemies of free men "into dust," Johnny Doughboy, jr., began to take stock.

In unprecented numbers, he and his kind swooped down on Army recruiting stations and volunteered for service under the new policy which throws every branch of the service open to 18-year-olds. The teen-agers can even win commissions if they've got what it takes to qualify for and then successfully complete the officer candidates' schools.

"Volunteer enlistments in this age group have increased at least 50 per cent in the last two days," an Army spokesman said last night.

Navy recruiting officers could report no such increase, but said that in view of the heavy rain of the last two days, "the overall picture is good. We expect an increase in the next few days, but right now we can't report any."

But in high schools, in colleges, in all the myriad there was an increasing awareness that they stand on the very threshold of what will be the supreme experience of their lives. President Roosevelt's remarks Monday night and the action of Congress in hastening legislation making the 18-and-19-year-olds subject to the draft removed all doubts as to their future. The only unanswered question, for them, is: When?

No one could be found yesterday who knew the answer.

Said the Selective Service System: "We cannot forecast, assuming that such legislation is passed, whether the youngsters now in school will be called before they complete their education, or even the current school year. Nor can we say in what order, in relation to those already subject to the draft, they will be called. It depends entirely on how many men the Army wants, and when it wants them. That, so far as we are concerned, is an unknown factor."

This much was known. Approxmiately 13,000 youngsters in this age group registered in June. By December, it is expected that an additional 3250 boys will have become 18, although a new registration will be necessary to bring them into the fold.

District selective service headquarters is nearing the bottom of its pool of single men. By December, it was said yesterday, all single men will have been called.

Of the 18-and-19-year-olds in the District, more than 3000 are enrolled in the public high schools where compulsory physical education programs are helping prepare them for whatever lies ahead.

Should all or any of these boys be called before the school year ends, school officials anticipate no need to lay off teachers because of a curtailed enrollment. The Government most likely, it was said, will fit them into some part of its training programs being carried out in conjunction with the schools.

Three of the Army's newly recruited youths—all aspirants for a post in the Army Air Forces—went up to WOL yesterday to shake hands with John Boles and hear him make his speech for the recording machines—a speech which will go on the air tonight at 8:30 o'clock.

The boys were Johnny Fillman, 19, of 2509 Brentwood Road Northeast, a McKinley High School graduate who, since his graduation in 1941, has been working as an apprentice machinist at the Engineering and Research Corporation in Riverdale, Md.; Edmond Ayers, 18, 326 South Pitt Street, Alexandria, a graduate of George Washington High School, and Robert Jacobs, 19, of 412 South Pitt Street, Alexandria, and also a graduate of G. W. High. Both boys have been working for the Southern Railroad.

The boys had just returned from Fort Myer, where they passed their physical and were ordered to report anytime within the next eight days for induction at Camp Lee, Va. Without exception, and they seemed to be speaking for the entire segment of that generation which they represent, the lads declared:

"They can't make it too soon for us. The sooner we get in training and see action, the better."

Postponement of President Rios' Visit

A desperate backstage tug-of-war has been taking place in Chile for the past two or three weeks to prevent President de Los Rios from making his scheduled visit to the United States.

DREW PEARSON

Chief wire-pullers in this tug-of-war have been Axis agents, many of them working through pro-Axis Chileans and Argentines. They anticipated that President Rios' trip would lead definitely to a Chilean break with the Axis, leaving Argentina as the one country still on diplomatic speaking terms with Germany, Japan and Italy.

Until the last two or three weeks President Rios did not take a very active interest in foreign affairs; saw everything through the prejudiced eyes of his foreign minister, Barros Jarpa, a strong isolationist.

But the other day young Nelson Rockefeller, head of the Cultural Committee for Latin America, called upon President Rios and gave him a first-hand picture of the American attitude toward the war and toward those countries which did not cooperate toward winning the war.

Harmful Gossip Spread

IMMEDIATELY after the Rockefeller visit all kinds of gossip spread along the diplomatic grapevine as to how the young millionaire had bull-dozed the president of Chile, threatening him with dire consequences if he did not break with the Axis. Chief spreader of this gossip was Foregin Minister Barros Jarpa, who reported that President Rios was so miffed with Rockefeller that he virtually had decided to cancel his trip.

This story, however, seems to have been generously smeared with the Axis propaganda brush. Actually, Rockefeller's talk was frank and friendly. He pointed out that the United States naturally would cooperate with those who cooperated with her. But he made no threats.

Furthermore, President Rios seemed to appreciate his frankness. He had never received a very clear picture of the situation through the somewhat distorted vision of his foreign minister, and he wrote a letter to a friend expressing his appreciation of the Rockefeller visit.

However, the backstage wire-pulling to keep President Rios away from the charm of F. D. Roosevelt continues.

When Sumner Welles last week in Boston said that Argentina and Chile had "permitted" secret information to leak to the Axis, the anti-American bloc in Chile pounced upon this with alacrity. Twisting the Spanish translation of "permitted" to mean "active collaboration," they used this word as their chief weapon to persuade Rios to postpone his trip.

It is believed that Rios will come to Washington later, but not until after a diplomatic breathing spell.

Republican Nickels

TIME was when the Republican Party depended on a handful of money kings to fill its coffers. But that day is gone.

Frank Gannett, new vice chairman of the Republican National Committee, is planning a Nation-wide radio appeal to American farmers and laborers for nickels, dimes and quarters for the G. O. P. war chest in the current congressional campaign.

Gannett will dig into his own pocket to pay for time on a network of stations to carry the broadcast.

In his appeal for funds, Gannett will charge that the New Deal has let farmers and laborers down, is now leading the Nation toward dictatorship.

Stranded United States Seamen

AT ALMOST the identical moment the President was pinning on the chest of young Edwin F. Cheney of Yeadon, Pa., the first Distinguished Service Medal for heroism awarded to a merchant seaman, an unusual meeting was being held behind closed doors on Capitol Hill.

CHENEY

And if Cheney, who saved 11 shipmates from a torpedoed tanker, knew what was happening at this meeting, he would have wondered at the inconsistency of his Government in singling out one merchant seaman as a hero while treating others equally valorous, almost like convicts.

Witnesses at the meeting, in the House Merchant Marine committee room, presented astounding evidence about the hardships of American seamen stranded on foreign soil.

Hoyt Haddock of the C. I. O. Maritime Committee, testified that 600 seamen, stranded in Trinidad, failed to receive medical treatment for days after being rescued from torpedoed merchant vessels. In addition, they were given inadequate food and clothing. The only toilet facilities, he said, were outhouses, "which could be reached only by trudging through knee-deep mud for a half mile."

Conditions are almost equally as bad in Egypt, the Persian Gulf region, West Africa and other places where United States seamen have been torpedoed.

Haddock blamed State Department "red tape" for these conditions; told how United States consuls had refused to provide decent care and medical attention for stranded seamen, though they have funds for this purpose; how consuls had delayed repatriation for long periods.

"The trouble with most of our consuls is that they are unfit by background and associations to deal with people who work for a living," Haddock declared. "Their treatment of stranded and disabled seamen has bordered almost on the inhuman."

Naval officers have shown a similar, snooty attitude, he added, forcing seamen to sleep on the floor between decks of ships returning them to the United States at times when there were empty staterooms on the ships. When stranded seamen in Iceland complained about the "concentration camp conditions" they had to endure, a naval officer angrily told them to "go jump in the Arctic Ocean" if they weren't satisfied, Haddock said.

NOTE: Recently the repatriation of torpedoed seaman has been speeded up, due to the joint efforts of the Army Transport Service and the War Shipping Administration.

Nazi Ex-Consul Under Guard

Santiago, Chile, Oct. 14 (AP).—Dr. Hans Borchers, former German consul general in New York, who turned up in Chile without diplomatic or consular credentials, was reported today under police guard at the seaside resort of Zapallar, where United States Ambassador Claude G. Bowers usually spends his Chilean summer vacations.

Surveillance was placed over the roving German soon after Undersecretary of State Sumner Welles in a speech in the United States accused Chile and Argentina of permitting Axis operations against shipping of the United Nations.

Borchers and the former German consul general at San Francisco, Fritz Weidmann, were returned to Germany via the United States transport West Point in July, 1941.

War Department A-A To Move to Newark

War Department will move its Allowance and Allotment Branch to Newark, N. J. The final decision was made yesterday and Newark got the call over New York City. The move will start almost immediately and it'll take a month or more before it's completed. The number of jobs—not people—to be transferred will be in the neighborhood of 5000. The division will be enlarged once it gets to Newark. The number of people to be moved is uncertain. It'll depend on the number who want to be transferred.

Services and Supply's personnel office has started to work out the transfer plan. It's hoped to move employes in other SOS divisions who want to go to Newark and to transfer Allowance and Allotment employes who want to stay here to other jobs in the departmental service. Allowance and Allotment is composed largely of low-paid clerical employes and the Civil Service Commission was having a difficult time recruiting workers for it. It's believed the recruitment problem will be far easier in the New Jersey-New York area. Moreover, employes here are working on a three-shift, 24-hour basis. In Newark, the night shifts will be eliminated.

Prediction: Ed Flynn, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, will resign after the November elections. His is a thankless job but the President appreciates it and he'll appoint Flynn to a top-notch Federal job, perhaps a Cabinet post. The negotiations are being worked out now. Meantime, the President's aides are scouting around trying to find a new committee chairman. Good bets are Postmaster General Walker and FDIC Boss Leo T. Crowley . . . OPA employes will hold a win-the-war rally tonight in the Interdepartmental Auditorium . . . H. B. McCoy has been appointed chief of the Industrial Economy Division at Commerce

Letter: "I note from your column that the young War Department officers call the reconstituted World War I officers 'retreads.' It may be entirely fitting to call these young seal-polishers 'synthetics.'" Signed: "Susie, the Stenog." . . . Civil Service immediately needs 20 laborers to shovel coal at 60 cents an hour. Apply at 520 Seventh Street . . . Chairman Bulow of the Senate Civil Service Committee said yesterday that he'd call a meeting within a few days to consider the Administration's uniform overtime bill which would provide for a basic 44-hour week in the Federal service. Overtime pay would be paid for hours worked over 40 and everyone would be guaranteed at least 4 hours of overtime each week. The Mead subcommittee, Bulow announced, had approved the bill.

A move has been made to take the lid off the money box at the Office of Price Administration and there are hints that the agency will be permitted to hire thousands of new employes. OPA has a tremendous rationing job to do but it will be hampered by a rider in the July appropriation bill which bars it from securing a deficiency appropriation from Congress during the 1943 fiscal year which ends June 30, 1943. Senator McKellar of Tennessee yesterday introduced an Administration sponsored amendment which would knock out the rider.

OPA now has around 40,000 employes and under its current budget it has funds to hire around 50,000 employes. The President and the Budget Bureau recommended funds to hire 65,000 employes and OPA is reported to have asked money enough for around 90,000 employes. With rent control extended, Nation-wide gas rationing, and the prospect of rationing many more articles, it is predicted in many quarters that OPA will need a minimum of 100,000 employes within the next year.

The Columbus Day speech of Attorney General Biddle was tops. It removed Italians from the alien enemy classification. Biddle was given a pat on the back by FDR for it. Copies of the speech are being dropped by planes over Italy . . . National Housing Boss Jack Blandford will be urged by Federal workers to take over some of the large unused or partly used homes in the downtown district and make them over into Federal dormitories.

Lanham Act Projects Are Approved

Waterworks, School, Hospital, Recreation Proposals for D. C. Are Backed by FWA

By Christine Sadler
Post Staff Writer

Federal works projects to cost more than $3,500,000—funds to come from the $17,500,000 appropriated for the Washington metropolitan area under provisions of the Lanham Act—were approved yesterday by the Federal Works Agency and announced by Brig. Gen. Philip B. Fleming.

They include reservoir and waterworks projects in the District, the erection of two new District schools, an addition of 105 beds to Gallinger Hospital, development of 20 Washington recreation areas, a health center in Arlington County and additions to the Montgomery County General Hospital at Sandy Spring, Md.

Projects inside the District will cost $3,065,000, of which $1,992,000 will be in grants and $1,072,500 in loans, the Federal Works Administrator said. Priority "clearance" has been secured for the work, it was stated.

Reservoir to Be Replaced

Waterworks improvements scheduled under the approvals call for demolition of one of the five-million-gallon capacity reservoirs at Fort Reno and the construction of a new 20-million-gallon capacity reservoir on the site.

"Engineers have found that it was not feasible to build the new reservoir without dismantling part of one of the present reservoirs," General Fleming said. This project, including necesary piping and "appurtenant works," will be financed by a FWA grant of $250,000 and a loan of the same amount.

Another waterworks projects calls for construction of more than 2½ miles of 54-inch water main for filtered water from the Dalecarlia Pumping Station to a connection with the gravity system near the south end of the Georgetown Reservoir and approximately ½ mile of 36-inch "blow off" main in addition. This project also includes installation of three low-lift pumps at Dalecarlia with a total capacity of 120,000,000 gallons daily. This will be financed with a grant of $335,500 and a loan of the same amount.

The third waterworks project within the District calls for the installation of capacity pumps. This will be financed by a grant of $459,000 and a similar amount loan.

Two Montgomery County projects approved call for the removal of "bottlenecks" in the water system of the Washington-Suburban Sanitary Commission and the construction of rooms for the addition of 28 beds and 8 bassinets at Sandy Spring. The hospital work will be done with a grant of $115,270. The waterworks improvements will be financed on a part grant and part loan basis, have an estimated cost of around $300,000.

The health center in Arlington County will be Federally financed and cost $168,000. It will be erected on the site of the Arlington County General Hospital, but will not be connected with it. It will cost $168,000, including a laboratory, and will be operated by Arlington County.

The 105 beds added to Gallinger will be for venereal disease patients and will be in addition to the 150-bed expansion program announced previously, General Fleming said. The project approved yesterday will cost $218,000.

Two New Schools

The two schools to be erected in the District are an elementary school to be built on the Stanton School site, to have eight rooms, a kindergarten room, two practical arts rooms, a principal's office and teachers' room; a combination elementary and junior high school for Negro pupils to be erected on the site of the Merritt School, to have 18 classrooms, laboratories, lunchrooms, a practical arts room and a music room.

These schools will cost $78,000, of which $70,000 will be supplied in an FWA grant. Equipment costs are included and the new buildings will be erected beside the old, not in place of them, the FWA said.

The 20 recreation centers approved, their sites, and costs were given as follows:

East Potomac Park area, $30,000; Bundy Recreation Center, between Fourth and Fifth, O and P Streets Northwest, $32,800; Eastern High Recreation Center, Nineteenth and East Capitol Streets Northeast, $12,925; Jefferson Recreation Center, Eighth and H Streets Southwest, $19,627; Randall Recreation Center, South Capitol and H Streets Southwest, $11,660; Coolidge Recreation Center, between Third and Fifth, VanBuren and Sherwood Streets Northwest, $27,600.

Other Recreation Centers

Buchanan Recreation Center, Thirteenth and D Streets Southeast, $11,382; Barry Farms Playground, Nichols Avenue and Sumner Street Southeast, $16,294; Rudolph Playground, between Third and Fourth, Ingraham and Hamilton Streets Northwest, $20,448; Congress Heights Recreation Center, Randall Place and Savannah Street Southeast, $7953; Eckington Recreation Center, Second and T Streets Northeast, 21,390; Powell Recreation Center, Sixteenth and Lamont Streets Northwest, $21,010; Francis Recreation Center, Twenty-fifth and H Streets Northwest, $32,650; Turkey Thicket Playground, Tenth and Michigan Avenue Northeast, $17,675.

Phoebe Hearst Playground, between Idaho Avenue, Thirty-seventh, Quebec and Tilden Streets Northwest, $17,586; Stevens Playground, Luzon Avenue and Van Buren Street Northwest, $11,200; Stoddert Playground, between Calvert, Davis, Thirty-ninth, and Forty-first Streets Northwest, $11,600; Anacostia Recreation Center, Eleventh Street and Pennsylvania Avenue Southeast, $16,500; Langston Recreation Center, Benning Road and Anacostia Park Northeast, $39,313; Hillcrest Recreation Center, Alabama Avenue and Thirtieth Street Southeast, $40,270.

The playground development will be federally financed in its entirety and mostly adjoining schools or school grounds as part of the plan to make schools recreation centers for their communities.

Victory Sidelights

Druggists to Give Redeemable Coupons for Old Paste Tubes

Householders who are holding on to their old tooth paste and shaving cream tubes because of the order requiring the presentation of an old tube when purchasing fresh supplies in collapsible metal tubes, may now clean out the bathroom medicine chest, fully asured they will in no way lose the redeemable value of the precious containers.

This comes about by reason of a plan worked out by the District Salvage Committee in cooperation with the District of Columbia Pharmaceutical Association.

In the future, all drug stores in Washington will issue a coupon for each collapsible metal tube turned in—each coupon redeemable upon purchase of a new tube of tooth paste or shaving cream at any future date.

Horace Walker, secretary of the District Salvage Committee, said last night that he had every confidence that the new plan would free thousands of pounds of valuable lead and tin which under present conditions would be turned in only in driblets, and urged all District of Columbia druggists to call the new plan to the attention of their customers at the earliest possible date.

Landis Asks No 'Glow' Materials Be Bought

James M. Landis, Director of Civilian Defense, has recommended that no phosphorescent materials be purchased at the present by defense councils or individuals for outdoor use in signs, stickers or armbands during blackouts, it was announced yesterday by OCD.

Brightness not exceeding that of ordinary white paint; rapid deterioration in sun and demand for critical chemicals used were reasons given by Landis for not buying phosphorescent materials. Phosphorescent materials are those which continue to glow for some time after exposure to light.

Defense Council's Next Meeting October 22

War to End Imperialism, Cleric Says

DR. BROWN

Dr. Brown, who reviewed his recent Clipper trip to England, is chairman of the Universal Christian Council for Life and Work, and of the joint executive committee of the American Section of the World Council of Churches, and professor emeritus of systematic theology at Union Theological Seminary, New York City.

He was professor there 50 years. This week he is conducting a series of lectures at the cathedral's College of Preachers on "Christian Unity."

While there is a deep conviction that no price is too high to pay for preserving England's way of life, that does not mean that the people expect to return to the old England of before the war, Dr. Brown said.

"On the contrary," he declared, "there is general opinion that the old England has gone never to return and many people believe that it is a good thing that it has gone."

Touching briefly on political observations, he said:

"If the freedom for which Britain profeses to be fighting means anything then it must be freedom for all the peoples of the Near and Far East as well as the peoples of Europe. Of Britain's sincerity, I have no doubt. If the different factions in India could agree on one form of government, they could have what they want without delay."

Trash-Free Streets Urged By Citizen Unit

More stringent enforcement of the laws against throwing trash and glass in the city streets was urged last night by the North Randle Community Citizen's Association.

The association held its first meeting in the new Kimball school.

It also was voted to ask that the school grounds be surfaced with macadam. Improved drainage at Branch Avenue and Anacostia Road Southeast was advocated.

P. L. J. Branca, chairman of the Salvage committee, reported that a total of $109 had accrued to the air raid warden fund from scrap sale and that weekly collections of scrap would be instituted.

Harold Snyder, Mrs. Mildred Kendrick and Mrs. Lucy Fink were named to the nominating committee.

West Home and School

William J. Mileham, chief air raid warden, spoke last night to the West Home and School Association at its first meeting of the fall.

New officers were installed as follows: President, F. L. Kohler; first vice president, Mrs. F. H. Taggart; second vice president, Miss Bertha Taylor; third vice president, Mrs. Simon Krupsaw; secretary, Mrs. James Rolls, and treasurer, Mrs. M. Van Vranken.

Mileham stressed in his talk the part children can take in preparedness for civilian defense.

Northeast Boundary

The Northeast Boundary Citizens Association last night heard Dr. Doxey Wilkerson of Howard University speak on the subject of the employment of Negroes in the public utilities.

As the result of his talk the association contributed $21 to the movement to have Negroes employed on streetcars and buses. Resolutions indorsing this movement were sent to President Roosevelt, the Public Utilities Commission and the Capital Transit Co.

It was reported that a total of $62.16 had been received from the sale of scrap metal collected and $50 of this was turned over to the air raid warden service.

The association also voted to ask that additional land be bought at the Merritt School for use as a playground.

Rhode Island Avenue

The Rhode Island Avenue Citizens Association last night voted to urge the inclusion into the Mead bill, dealing with the pay of civil service employes, the teachers of the District school system.

It was decided to sponsor a Halloween dance on Halloween night at Taft High School with a party for the smaller children on the preceding Friday night.

Opposition was expressed to any zoning changes in the 1200 block of Hamlin Street Northeast.

Correction—

A story in late editions of yesterday's Post stated incorrectly that Isadore Glasser, owner of two auto-wrecking yards here, had offered to give employment to convicted drunks, in cooperation with a rehabilitation plan of Municipal Court Judge Armond W. Scott at a wage of $2 a day. The wage offered by Glasser was $4 a day.

Doctor Cites Health Peril In Capital

Conditions Held Good Now But Fear Is Expressed If War Drags On

A warning that conditions favorable to the spread of meningitis exist in Washington was coupled last night by Health Officer George C. Ruhland with the observation that, if the war lasts three or four years, the District reasonably may expect an influenza epidemic of major proportions.

In a detailed survey of the District's health situation delivered before a District Medical Society forum at 1718 M Street Northwest, Dr. Ruhland emphasized his belief that currently there is no cause for alarm, inasmuch as this year's health record, excluding tuberculosis, is better than "last year's exceptionally good record."

But, he said, an ever increasing population which only aggravates Washington's overcrowded condition is laying the foundation for that type of community in which communicable diseases flourish best.

The only communicable diseases in which there has been an increase this year, he said, are whooping cough and meningitis.

Urges Constant Vigilance

Although there are only 39 cases of the latter disease, he said, "it is one of those things we are really concerned about." He urged constant vigilance on the part of physicians against the spread of this or any other disease.

Dr. Ruhland urgently stressed the need for additional hospital facilities—pointing out that even against a minimum standard of four beds for each 1000 population the metropolitan area is still short 1000 beds—and discussed, guardedly, the shortage of practicing physicians. He said Washington has 2157 licensed physicians, but so many of them have entered the armed services that the ratio now is "far below" one physician to each 1750 persons. No other figures were supplied, either by Dr. Ruhland or the medical society, which has completed a survey on the shortage, but has not made it public.

The nurse situation, he said, is just as bad. "At Glenn Dale (the District Tuberculosis Sanitarium), we are short 31 nurses. From the Civil Service Commission we have received a list of 200 eligible women, but not one of these has yet accepted a nursing job there."

Floor Closed

Earlier, the forum heard from Miss Lillian Bragan, representing the District home nursing committee of the Red Cross, that one hospital has been forced to close off one floor because of a shortage of nurses, and that maternity patients are being removed to their homes from some hospitals 24 hours after delivery. She urged the physicians to help secure volunteers for the Red Cross' nurses' aide classes.

Other speakers included Drs. V. L. Ellicott, Ralph G. Beachley and John M. Byers, the health officers of Montgomery, Arlington and Prince Georges Counties, respectively.

Each reported that his particular area faced no major problem in the field of public health and said that their health departments were wide awake to the possibilities inherent in overcrowded areas and prepared to act swiftly should any disease approach the epidemic stage.

All three, particularly the Maryland physicians, deplored the lack of adequate hospital facilities in the metropolitan area.

From a member of the society, Dr. Walter Freeman, came the report—startling to the layman—that mental health improves in wartime. In times of great conflict such as the present, he said, petty quarrels and worries are submerged in the consciousness of a greater danger and anticipation gives away to a concrete chance for action.

"Peace!" he shouted. "Why, it's hard on the nerves."

Congress Planning No 'Toot' Regulations

Because it is "ridiculous" and Congress would "be making a laughing stock of itself" if it undertook to enter the controversy, no legislation will be enacted regulating the blasts of air-raid sirens, the number of "toots of an air-raid warden's whistle" or other emergency signals, Representative Andrew J. May (Democrat), of Kentucky, chairman of the House Military Affairs Committee, predicted yesterday.

Mr. May said the subject had been broached by Lieut. Col. Clarence J. Hauck, of the legislative and liaison division of the War Department, who was acting at the request of the Office of Civilian Defense.

"It is such a frivolous thing," Mr. May said, "that we told them to do it by regulation."

Mary Haworth's Mail

Woman Mocks Stand Against Suicide, in This Age When Large-Scale Destruction of Life Has Become the Leading Industry of Big Nations

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: How strange it is to maintain a moral stand against suicide, at this age in history, when the taking of human life, on the largest possible scale, has become the leading industry in all the world's great nations! How strange that anyone who subscribes to the war effort, which means promiscuous taking of life, should feel it a matter of abhorrence for a person to elect to take his own life!

The human race is engaged in the fallacy of trying to decide the age-old conflict between good and evil,—or between God and the devil,—on the extraordinary basis of pitting flesh and blood against machine guns and by blindly going "all out," in the insensate ambition to establish right by force of might; by maiming and mangling and destroying, with the idea that "my side may kill off your side." This conflict did not start with Hitler and the Japanese. It began with Adam. But it has reached its apotheosis in this age, in which we are ill-fated to be living.

And Mary Haworth, so clear thinking and brilliant within her own fixed mental framework, is apparently able to accept and even to indorse this racial lunacy without questioning and yet to express denunciation of a would-be suicide. In the name of reason, if one lacks ethical sanction in any circumstance to take his own life,—whose life can he ethically take? Instead of denouncing suicide, I have long advocated that a lethal tablet should be part of the required equipment for every man who is sent into battle. Then, should he be hopelessly or hideously wounded, he has at least the privilege of shortening his death agonies,—a privilege society generally accords to the lesser animals. How do you feel about this, Mary Haworth?

THERESA R.

Random Argument Based On Emotional Reaction

DEAR T. R.: I feel that this is one more example of random argument based on sloppy thinking,—if, indeed, one can rightly apply the term "thinking" to your emotional reaction to this department's previous comment on the subject of suicide. To begin, none of my remarks could possibly be construed,—if comprehended at their simple face value,—as constituting "a moral stand against suicide." Which is not to say, however, that such a stand might not be unexceptionably sustained, by spokesmen for the moral domain of experience.

To one correspondent's question, namely, "What do you think is the feeling of the families of persons who commit suicide?"—I replied (and who can deny?) that "any family of normal sensibilities is going to feel inexpressibly shocked and shamed if some member, by committing suicide, thus sensationally advertises his weakness," inasmuch as the reasons for suicide may be roughly classified as three: mental illness, lack of courage and desire to inflict revenge. That correspondent had plainly said, "I am not concerned with the ethics of the question." Taking him at his word, I made no attempt to explore that aspect of the subject,—which, anyway, is a question for the moral specialist and which would require reams of paper, instead of the few paragraphs at my daily disposal, for even the most cursory consideration.

For another thing,—what shallow sophistry to try to confuse the issue by raising a quibbling comparison between the comparative hideousness of war slaughter versus self-destruction. And what plausible distortion of truth,—to imply, as you do, that the citizen who subscribes to a national war effort is thereby lending moral indorsement to the "promiscuous taking of life," not to mention wholesale maiming and mangling. One doesn't have to be scholar or logician to know (for instinct tells one) that the nation, race or individual deliberately committed to war is actually committed to mortal combat which has self-preservation or the expansion of life opportunities as its avowed and believed-in end and aim. And that end is, of course, diametrically opposed to the suicidal yen for self-destruction.

My Views on War, Not Mentioned Before

You speak of my being able "to accept and even to indorse the racial lunacy of war without question, while expressing condemnation of a would-be suicide." What muddled forensics! Since I have never heretofore touched on my views concerning war in this column,—how could you possibly know whether I "indorse" it? And as for "expressing condemnation of a would-be suicide,"—I didn't. I simply outlined society's consensus reaction to the sick-minded gesture; and, as an afterthought, told the correspondent who brought up the subject how to cope more constructively with his melancholia, if he so desires.

I hold no brief in favor of murder by war, any more than for murder by any other means. But I venture to suggest that every man has the right to defend his life and possessions and the lives of those dear to him,—as best he can, when aggressively put upon by robbers or murderers. And I can scarcely claim that as an original idea,—when self-preservation is recognized to be nature's first law and when society's laws (slow centuries in formulating) judiciously affirm that fact.

To appraise mankind's and society's possibilities from a rational standpoint is to see clearly that war IS lunacy, of course. But one also sees that it is a reflection, on the grand scale, of lunacy inherent in certain forms of human nature. Yet, if a sane man shall be put upon by a murderously inclined maniac and shall grimly and deliberately put up a fight to the finish for his life,—is he to be adjudged a murderous lunatic, too? Not by my reasoning.

Humankind Gives Lie To Her Contentions

If war is lunacy, as we agree, then it must be that wantonly aggressive warmakers are to be classified (by modern standards of enlightenment) in the lunatic category,—whether as individuals or races or nations,—and that we have today a situation in which such lunatics have embroiled the whole world in the present tremendously destructive human conflict. But you must concede, surely, that (1) the peaceably inclined peoples who have been drawn into that conflict, through no wish of their own, have a moral right to resist to their utmost the danger that threatens; and (2) that in exercising that right they are manifesting an instinctive appreciation of life which gives the lie to your confused contentions. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

ONE JUMP AHEAD

By Jeanne Contini

A jumper is the kind of garment that always makes a place for itself in your wardrobe and never has to be taken on blind faith. You know if it's well cut it will be becoming, no matter what kind of figure you have. For you who work on the Government assembly line we particularly recommend it as the duration dress of all time.

It's a good investment. By that we mean easy to wear, a fashion, not a fad; a constant that can be paired with any number of variables. A jumper goes ove rall kinds of shirts, blouses and sweaters, thereby simplifying the notorious cleaning problem. It forms a fine base for separate jackets. For a semisedentary office life it relieves your mind of the shirt-out-of-skirt difficulty . . . eliminating bunching, separating and the resultant yank.

A gray flannel jumper is particularly fine . . . i. e. sketch. This one is the answer to the office draft (breeze and selective service). The upper half is quilted and lined. The skirt will take an inordinate amount of sitting without a rumple. We suggest with it a dark shirt for less cleaning and more fashion this year, but it will go with any of your shirts . . . gray being neutral. Wear it for bowling . . . the give is in the front for a long, free swing. Top it with your suit jacket and an old scarf tucked in at the neck.

As a matter of fact, we could go on about it for a long time; but see for yourself. The price will probably leave enough salary for a new blouse to go with it—and a pair of string gloves. For further information please call NAtional 4200, extension 242, between 9 a. m. and 5 p. m.

SHOP AND RUN

By Marianne

As soon as the excitment of last minute shop-and-runs for gifts to be sent abroad dies down, you'll be dashing around trying to conform to official regulations on packing and mailing.

If your attitude toward a ball of twine and a roll of wrapping paper is about average, that means you'll try to pursuade brother, husband, or best friend that he wraps packages so nicely. Whether or not the pursuasion is effective, you'll appreciate these inexpensive items that practically wrap themselves up.

Ten cents buys you a sturdy white corrugated box that officially conforms to size specifications of the Government, and unofficially tempts any Pandorian curiosity to disregard the "Don't Open Until Christmas" tag.

"Don't go near the water" wasn't meant for our specially wrapped gifts. It took doing, ladies, but we found it: Waterproof wrapping paper, and practically in our backyard—on F Street. Comes in solid colors and designs at 10 cents a roll.

Don't get too enthusiastic with the sealing tape in your efforts to do a professional looking job. You get yards and yards of it in a wide bolt, but leave an end of it sticking up, since all your efforts are subject to the censor's keen eye.

Seal your gift with a kiss but just for practical purposes there's a bit of insurance in a large ball of brown or white twine. Remember too, your package may be the one on the bottom!

The postal authorities will handle your package lovingly if you plainly print addresses on a gummed label. There's all the space you need for those terribly long military addresses. Forty in a book for 5 cents.

No official regulations on how pretty your gift can look! Do your "exterior decorating" with gold stars, patriotic seals, and cellophane bows from 5 cents to 25 cents. Would cheer the censor up a bit and who knows—might soften his touch!

Where to find them? Call National 4200, Ext. 242, between 9 a. m. and 5 p. m.

Tongue Is an Indicator Of Your General Health

By Logan Clendening, M. D.

Ten years ago you could hear the then modern, up-to-date doctor making all kinds of fun of the older practioner's reliance on the appearance of the tongue as an indication of general health. Today even the most modern graduate is by no means so likely to scoff.

We have learned much of the changes in the tongue in general bodily health and ill health. A prominent practioner states: "The tongue is probably a better indicator of internal disturbances than any other part of the oral mucosa." Our knowledge of changes in the appearance of the tongue is much more accurate than was that of the practitioner of 30 years ago.

We may say that the tongue has quite characteristic appearances in anemia, in many vitamin deficiencies, in thyroid conditions (either over-secretion or under-secretion), in generalized infections, drug eruptions and uremia. It even is possible in aviators to make a diagnosis of air embolism, or "bend," from flying in too high altitudes, by looking at the tongue.

An Old Saying

"Raw, red tongue; raw, red stomach," is an old saying which probably has a good deal to it. It usually means also some degree or form of anemia. Atrophy of the tongue with smoothing out of the little roughnesses is also an extremely reliable sign of anemia.

The coated tongue is likely to indicate a poor state of digestion, because it means the tongue does not move around the mouth as much, which it would if the person were eating plenty of wholesome food. In fact, the coating of the tongue which the older practitioners relied on depends simply on the amount of moving the tongue is doing.

A coating on one half of the tongue occurs when half the tongue is immobilized by paralysis. Professor Middleton of the University of Wisconsin, thinks there is a relation between the amount of coating on the tongue and the amount of acid in the gastric juice. Of a series of patients who had coated tongues, only 25 per cent had normal gastric juice.

Degree of Moisture

The dryness or moisture of the tongue is, according to an eminent Boston practictioner, "the best evidence the doctor has to the state of hydration of the body."

The state of the tongue in nutritional deficiencies, especially vitamin deficiencies, has been very carefully worked out. In fact in two forms of vitamin deficiency—riboflavin deficiency and pellagra—the principal changes appear in the tongue, and the diagnosis cannot be made unless they are present.

The tongue in pellagra is sore, red and swollen. The return to normal, with blanching of the tongue on the use of nicotinic acid, is dramatic.

In riboflavin deficiency the tongue is not so much fiery red as purple or magneta in color. And the papillae are flattened out, mushroom shaped, so that the tongue has a pebbled appearance.

Thus your modern diagnostician has even better reasons for saying "stick out your tongue" than his predecessor of 50 years ago.

Glare Is Waste

Unshaded lamp bulbs are not only a source of harmful glare, but are also a prime waster of light. Shade all bulbs to direct light where it's needed, instead of scattering it every-which-way.

Felt Stripping Will Protect You in Cold Weather

With the fuel shortage facing millions of families throughout the country, many people who never before worried about putting weather strips on their windows and doors are now giving the matter serious attention. In numerous cases they are finding difficulty in obtaining the old-fashioned weather-stripping made of rubber slotted in wood, while metal strips, of course, are generally not available.

A satisfactory substitute is wool felt, which can be obtained in various qualities quite suitable for the purpose. In the case of metal window frames, felt channel strips can be fitted to keep out draft and rain most efficiently. They can be applied to wooden sashes with ordinary tacks or with duco household cement.

Considerable saving in fuel will result in many cases if felt strips are used surrounding the doorway. If the door has an old-fashioned lock with large keyhole, a slotted tab to cover it—with hole to fit the key snugly—will keep out much cold wind.

Apertures on the hinge side of the door, so often neglected, may have flat strips of felt applied so that the door, when closed, presses tightly against it. Another good spot to use it is on the bottom of garage doors of the swinging or folding type, while slidling doors may have it applied along the tracks and on the closing contact edges.

Not only will felt keep out inclement weather, but on windy days it will prevent unpleasant rattle and vibration.

Show Colors

Watch the colors you wear, girls, if you would cheer the service boys you entertain. That's the advice given in the Girl's Service Organization Manual, published by the National Council of the Y. W. C. A. Since the boys wear navy blue or khaki day in and day out, the wise girl will not wear these unrelieved colors. Pink and blue are always good; red, combined with green or white, is a favorite. A fresh flower and a colored handkerchief can brighten a costume and lend a feminine touch the boys like.

Foil Friction. Follow Rules For Wool Coat

To foil friction and minimize strain on your woolen coat, follow these rules:

If you drive a car, get into it on the side nearest the wheel, instead of scraping along the whole seat until you worm your way into position—and wear out the seat of your coat!

If you must sit in your coat for any length of time, unbutton it and pull it up slightly in the back.

If you are a straphanger (and who isn't?) unbutton your coat to prevent unnecessary strain on it.

Underarm handbags wear off the nap of your coat by friction. Neither they nor the packages you carry for victory should be pressed or rubbed against the garment.

ON THE HOME FRONT

RE-COVER YOUR OLD UMBRELLA

By Martha Ellyn

"Let a smile be your umbrella on a rainy, rainy, day," may be all right for the sentimental. But a smile won't keep you from getting drenched in a downpour of rain. And a smile won't keep your clothes dry.

It is important today not only to conserve our clothes and health, but our umbrellas, too. The metal framework and the covering of umbrellas are both precious materials. So when your umbrella rips or splits, don't throw it away. Recover it and save the metal needed for war uses.

Miss Clarice L. Scott and Miss June A. Lane, Division of Textiles and Clothing, Bureau of Home Economics, U. S. Department of Agriculture, have been on their toes in working out suggestions for conservation. Today we are giving you their directions for recovering umbrellas. The directions work beautifully for I have reconditioned two of my umbrellas.

Materials—One yard 39-inch plain cloth will cover the ordinary umbrella. If plaid is used, more will be needed. A showerproof finish is desirable but a tight weave will repel water and serve well.

To Take Umbrella Apart—Remove the end tip and rib tips. If they are on very tight, loosen with pliers, but be very careful not to break them. Take off the shirred circle beneath the tip. Clip the threads that hold the rib tips to the cover and note when doing this how they were sewed in. Remove the cover, the flat circle of cloth between cover and frame, and the shirred one tacked over the hinges next to the handle.

The Pattern—Rip out one section of the cover or cut exactly on the seam lines. Press. Cut a paper pattern with a ¼-inch seam on each of the two sides. Add 3/16-inch for the edge hem. Plan the pattern layout on your material with the sections dovetailed to avoid waste. If the material is plaid, the sections must be cut so the pattern matches around the umbrella. Cut three circles using the one that was not shirred as a pattern. Cut a ⅛-inch hole in the center of each. Cut 1-inch circles of cloth, one for each rib in the frame.

To Make Cover—Hem and stitch the edge of each section. A ¼-inch hem, stitched twice, is a durable neat finish. Adjust the seam guage on your machine, then seam the sections together. Firm materials may be finished with pinking. On the top side of the cover at the outer end of each seam lay a rib tip, the point turned back. From the inside of the cover sew firmly through the eye of the tip, then turn it forward. Sew a 1-inch circle over the midway hinge of each rib. Place one of the larger circles over the tip of the umbrella. Put the cover on, and push a tip on each rib end. From the inside tack the seams of the cover to the ribs of the frame. This holds each seam in place.

Gather the edge of another of the larger circles. Put it over the frame tip and draw it to fit. Spread glue inside the tip and press it on tightly. Cut the third circle from the outer edge to the center. Turn under and gather the outer edge. Fold and crease as illustrated, then sew it over the frame hinges next to the handle.

Make a new band just like the old one for holding the umbrella closed when not in use. Use the same button and ring and tack the band securely to a seam next to the rib tip.

BEW's Patricia Koerner Finds Working In Washington Demanding, But She Has 'A Marvelous Time' at it, Too

By Anne Hagner

You might call Patricia Koerner, a clerk-typist in the personnel division of the Board of Economic Warfare, a typical Government girl if you looked at the record.

Pat, a 19-year-old from Butler, Pa., who came to Washington in January, answers every qualification for representing the "average Government employe" who has been talked about, written about and worried about from New York to California.

But you don't have to worry about this war worker. She earns $1440 a year, she invests 10 per cent of her salary in war bonds, she has a marvelous time in Washington, she manages her own life as capably as a woman twice her age—but of course, like most of us, there isn't much left over after her necessities are deducted.

Although the Board of Economic Warfare is not her first job, it is by far the most demanding she has attempted. When she made an occasional flurry at working in Butler she didn't have to report at 8:45 every morning and remain until 5:30 every night, as she does here.

In Butler she took a straight commercial course in high school, with music, drama and speech added for good measure. In Washington she finds little time to pursue these hobbies, but likewise little time to miss them.

Does she keep a budget?

"Oh, no, I never can keep my figures straight!" she sighs—but she knows full well that every two weeks cost her $7.20 for food and transportation, which any dyed-in-the-restaurant Washingtonian will tell you is practically phenomenal.

Her clothes were purchased with an eye to durability and versatility—suits, warm woolens and neat accessories.

Use Nutrition Tricks to Curb Appetite

The tang in the air puts a sharp edge on your appetite, particularly if you are trying to lose weight. You're hungry. So now is the time to use all the tricks that will help outwit the appetite without boosting the calories.

Include in every meal some food that stays by you. Don't try to get by on just a salad and a thin sandwich. You'll begin feeling sorry for yourself and that's the first step in the wrong direction. Eggs, cheese, lean meat, fish or fowl all have a high satiety value, and any one of these foods will keep you from feeling hungry between low-calorie meals. Have an egg for breakfast, then cheese or another egg for lunch and lean meat, fish or fowl for dinner. With the main meal have a fluffy baked potato. That's just 100 calories. Use half a pat of butter. Have hearty foods but go light on trimmings. Keep the calories down by having the meat baked, broiled or boiled—never fried. Trim off all the fat. Avoid gravy and spread the butter thin.

You should also include in the meal some foods which are known as "space-fillers," such as crunchy low-calorie biscuits, and salads and bulky vegetables and fruits. Any food which requires considerable chewing helps you to feel satisfied more quickly. Cole slaw, cabbage and carrot, mixed raw vegetables or apple and celery are all excellent—but calories lurk in the dressing, so use it sparingly.

In Hollywood, it's the style to serve the salad first. That's a good plan for the reducer for it helps to take the edge of a ravenous appetite. Try it. Have a chewy salad first. Then have a cup of hot bouillon. A cup of soup or bouillon imparts great comfort for few calories. Then with the main dish and vegetables, and fruit for dessert, you will feel well fed.

When you take a hot soup or a beverage do not take any water. Water isn't fattening, but you can't have a svelte figure if you gulp down a couple of glasses of water in addition to a beverage. A good slimming rule is not to take over eight ounces of liquid with the meal. Drink all the water you want between meals.

Another trick you might like to borrow from the actresses is to drink milk between meals. Actresses have to keep streamlined, but they must keep up their strength, so they take a pint of skim milk or buttermilk between meals, so as to cut down the meal-time liquids. You need milk. If you take it skimmed, then have a green leafy vegetable, both cooked and raw, to replace the vitamin A lost in the butter fat.

Here is a low calorie menu in which all the tricks are used to keep the menu satisfying, reducing and perfectly adequate.

Women's Contribution To Salvage Program

By Elizabeth McRae Boykin

Probably women's greatest contribution to the war effort will be in the conservation and salvage program. Millions of women all over the land working together on these vital phases of the war front will really get somewhere. The place to begin is in proper care of present possessions and equipment.

And one of the most irreplaceable categories of furnishings which we need and use daily is upholstered furniture. The need to fix it up and fix it over to make it last through the war is becoming increasingly urgent. Many workmen are alert to this need and offer re-conditioning services on upholstered furniture which begins with breaking the old piece down to the frame and rebuilding it completely, replacing the old filling, repairing and re-gluing the frame, putting on a new cover. The piece is for all practical purposes like a new one, so through is the renovating job. In addition to the remodeling of the chair, often the furniture is put through a sterilization process that not only kills germs and odors but also makes the fabric flame resistant.

Other renovating services that help keep old things on duty include restoration of old finishes on marred furniture, repairing of knobs and legs and other ailments that put furniture on the blink if not attended to at the first creak. Rug cleaning, rug repair and rug re-styling can cover such points as cutting down and rebinding rugs, dyeing or bleaching them. Feather pillows can be cleaned, re-vitalized and recovered . . . draperies and spreads can be professionally laundered or cleaned. Even covers on upholstered furniture that do not need to be replaced can be cleaned without removing them if you get a skilled workman on the job.

Most of the renovations we've mentioned here require an expert's skill. But if such services are beyond the budget, the amateur can achieve certain reconditioning jobs if pains and patience are applied to the job.

Trend Toward Prohibition Gains Headway

By Genevieve Reynolds
The Post Club Editor

Working on the theory that the sale and manufacture of alcoholic beverages are detrimental to the war effort, the Women's Christian Temperance Union of the District of Columbia went on record for wartime and demobilization prohibition. A resolution to that effect was passed yesterday at its sixty-eighth annual convention held at Calvary Baptist Church. It was the last session of the two-day convention.

The resolution stated that: "The manufacture, sale and distribution of all alcoholic liquors should be stopped entirely for the duration of the war and the period of demobilization thereafter except for scientific, medicinal and industrial purposes; also that all existing liquor stocks should be restilled for industrial and munitions purposes and that all distilleries and breweries should be used for the production of war necessities."

Follows National Line

Adoption of the resolution was compatible with the National Women's Christian Temperance Union's wartime program adopted at the recent convention held in Birmingham, Ala.

In stressing the importance of wartime prohibition, the District of Columbia W. C. T. U. also pointed outb y means of another unanimously adopted resolution by convention members that the organization reaffirmed its belief that national prohibition is the only logical, moral and effective method of dealing with the liquor traffic in time of either peace or war.

Mrs. Ida W. Ramsey, who was reelected president of the District of Columbia, Women's Chirstian Temperance Union, yesterday said that the general trend toward wartime prohibition is gaining some headway. She pointed out that many large church organizations are taking up the campaign for wartime prohibition.

This will be the seventh year that Mrs. Ramsey has been named to the presidency. Previously, she held the office for five years—the limit anyone can serve in the District—retired for one year and again was named to the presidency.

Officers Reelected

Other officers reelected include Mrs. F. S. Berry, first vice president; Mrs. Gertrude F. Hoage, treasurer; Mrs. Clifford W. Hurley, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Cleve C. Pulver, recording secretary; Mrs. Ival B. Stout, assistant recording secretary. The only new officer named was Mrs. Ival B. Stout, second vice president.

Morning session of the convention yesterday, which was presided over by Mrs. Berry, the first vice president, consisted of the following program: Service of song, Mrs. Ethel H. Reed; devotions, Mrs. E. E. Eaton; salute to the flag lead by Mrs. Marie Brinely; reading of the minutes by Mrs. Cleve C. Pulver; nomination of official board by Mrs. Clifford Hurley; solo by Mrs. Reed with Mrs. E. M. Woolgar as accompanist; Mrs. Ramsey gave highlights of the sixty-eighth national convention and Mrs. Charles Williams and Mrs. R. E. S. Boss, memorial services.

Three-minute reports on department work were given by Mrs. Everett Eaton, Mrs. Clyde J. Couch and Mrs. Emma Knaub. Following the introduction of guests was an informal luncheon.

World YWCA Elects Officer For Orient

At a meeting of the executive committee of the World's Y. W. C. A. held here recently, Mrs. Chu Shih-ming, now of Washington, was elected to the vacant seat caused by the resignation of Mrs. Huang Siu-feng, vice president for the Orient. Mrs. Chu was formerly a member of the national committee of China and president of the Y. W. C. A. in Hangchow, Nanking and Chungking.

Reports were received from Mrs. Evelyn W. Fox and Mrs. Benedicte Wilhjelm, of the staff at the World's Y. W. C. A. headquarters in Geneva, Switzerland, as well as from many national associations. From Great Britain it was reported that Mrs. Arthur Grenfell has left the presidency of the British national committee and Lady Helen Graham has been elected to this office Several American Y. W. C. A. secretaries are now under appointment to assist the British Y. W. C. A. in its war emergency service.

Miss Emma Hirth, national general secretary of the Y. W. C. A. in the United States, read a letter from an American officer stationed in an isolated city in Australia, expressing appreciation of all that the Y. W. C. A. is doing for his men. This service is given not only in such practical ways as sewing on buttons, but in parties and dances.

It has been possible for the Y. W. C. A. as a world organization to extend a mutual service to women interned in many countries because of the war.

Reports of such service to women interned in Great Britain, Australia, France, Germany, the United States and Palestine, were received.

In the Caribbean area the Y. W. C. A. is developing at several points. Since January a special representative from the World Y. W. C. A., Miss Ruth Cowdrey, has visited and advised the pioneer associations in Surinam and British Guiana.

Miss Ruth Woodsmall, the general secretary of the World's Y. W. C. A., reported that on her recent visit to Sotuh America an "intercountry consultation" with the representation from the Y. W. C. A. in five countries was held in Buenos Aires, Argentina. Countries represented at the conference were Peru, Chile, Uruguay, Brazil and Argentina.

Women Urged To Supply Data for File

Citing President Roosevelt's remark that "within less than a year from now, there will probably be as many women as men working in our war production plants," Miss Bertha Nienburg, Women's Bureau, United States Department of Labor, chairman of the Fact Finding Committee of the National Club, urged members of the National Business and Professional Women's Clubs, Inc., to fill out the information requested for the master file.

Expensive Economy

Makeshift wiring is an expensive economy. If you need a longer cord on an appliance or a lamp, have an electrician lengthen it for you. Don't try splicing on a piece of cord yourself and covering it with baseball tape. It's dangerous, says the director of home lighting for Westinghouse. And don't ever use substitutes for fuses. Fuses are safety devices to signal when something is wrong, and makeshifts are no protection. When replacing a fuse, stand on a dry board, a wooden chair or ladder, not on a damp or cement floor, or on the ground.

Day Nurseries For Thousands Sorority Aim

Day nurseries for thousands of "door-key children"—the eight-hour orphans whose parents are employed in war plants—are the aim of Alpha Chi Omega, national women's fraternity sorority which last year raised $2000 for the rehabilitation of England's bomb-shocked children.

Mrs. Joseph H. Ball, wife of the Senator from Minnesota and local defense chairman for Alpha Chi Omega, and Mrs. John Wilson Houser of Wayne, Pa., national defense chairman, yesterday met with Congresswoman Mary Norton, whose work in establishing day nurseries for children of mothers in war industries during World War I led to a political career.

Ultimate Objective

"Alpha Chi Omega's hope is to eventually establish a war nursery in each of the key defense centers of the 12 provinces into which our fraternity has divided its 188 chapters and clubs," Mrs. Houser said. "Over $1000 already has been raised to begin the work, and the first war nursery probably will be started in Philadelphia's war factory area where the need is urgent, according to the Council of Social Agencies in that city."

"The need for more day nurseries for America's 'door-key children' has become increasingly urgent as incidents multiply in key defense centers," Mrs. Norton pointed out. "Children are locked out of their homes while mothers and fathers work, others are chained to trailers, and some are locked in cars outside factory windows. Many infants are being cared for by older brothers and sisters hardly more than babies themselves. In some communities such neglect already has led to small children ganging up and seeking lawless adventure."

Close to War Plants

Location of nurseries will be close to war plants so that mothers may leave their children conveniently every morning.

In addition to raising money by forfeiting funds for sorority dances, by rummage and white-elephant sales, by auctioning off clothing and needlepoint, and by raffling war bonds, funds also will be solicited from heads of war factories to carry on the work of the nurseries, without which much of the feminine personnel can not be employed.

The fund raised by Alpha Chi Omega for the British children was sent to London through the British War Relief Society. The money is being used at St. Christopher's Nursery College at Tunbridge Wells, Kent, where much of the work of reconditioning youngsters suffering from temporary loss of vision or balance due to shock from bombings is being carried on.

Consulting with Mrs. Mary Norton, Democratic Congresswoman about the plans of their sorority, Alpha Chi Omega, to establish war nurseries are Mrs. Joseph E. Ball, wife of the Republican Senator from Minnesota and local defense chairman of the sorority; Mrs. John Wilson Houser of Wayne, Pa., national defense chairman, and Miss Gertrude Drach, member of the sorority

TIMELY PERSONALITIES

Stage Door Canteen Has Its First Authors' Night

Before now, when you saw Sylvia Meyer's name in print, it meant a forthcoming concert. This time, it's her approaching marriage to Capt. Oliver Gasch (above). Rites are set for Saturday at 12:30 p. m., at the bride-elect's home, 3327 P Street

MISS SYLVIA MEYER

Noted Harpist Is Engaged To Capt. Oliver Gasch

Music hath charms . . . but so has romance. That, at least, must be the opinion of Sylvia E. Meyer, solo harpist with the National Symphony Orchestra, who will become the bride of Capt. Oliver Gasch on Saturday.

The couple will live in Washington upon their return from the honeymoon and it is quite probable that the bride, daughter of Balthasar H. Meyer, will probably combine homemaking with her musical career with the symphony here.

Miss Meyer has been with the National Symphony here for the last nine years. She came to Washington as a youngster when her father was appointed to the ICC. A graduate of the University of Wisconsin, she is a member of Phi Beta Kappa. She later was graduated from Peabody Conservatory at Baltimore, where she received its highest award, the artist diploma, given for outstanding ability in public performance.

Capt. Gasch, who is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Herman E. Gasch of this city, is now on leave from his duties as assistant corporation counsel of the District, and is on active duty in the Litigation Division of the Judge Advocate General's Office.

Kettlers to Leave For New Post

Lieut. William J. Kettler, U. S. A., Air Corps, of Silver Spring, Md., will leave today for his new post in Winston-Salem, N. C.

Before joining her husband next week, Mrs. Kettler is being widely feted at farewell parties. Tonight she will be honored at a dinner given by Mrs. Harris Barnum, of Hillandale. Mrs. Kettler's mother, Mrs. Marguerite Fisher, and daughter, Martha, of Washington, will entertain for her.

Dr. and Mrs. William C. Bashore of Bethesda will give a dinner Sunday night at the Kenwood Club, and Monday Mrs. Howard Twilley will be hostess at a farewell luncheon.

Mrs. F. R. Keefer Off to Richmond

Mrs. Frank Royer Keefer will leave Washington Sunday for Richmond, Va., to be present at the Fiftieth Anniversary of the founding of the National Society of Colonial Dames in the State of Virginia.

Mrs. Keefer is a life member of the Colonial Dames and is descended from Col. John Page of Williamsburg, who contributed funds to build the first James Bruton Church. Colonel Page and his wife, Alice, who died in 1680 are buried in the churchyard where their beautiful monument still stands.

The Colonial Dames luncheon will be held at Wilton, on the James, the beautiful historic home of the Virginia Colonial Dames.

Mrs. Herbert A. Smith is chairman of the Washington committee. Mrs. Theodore Benson, whose daughter Elizabeth made her debut last year and is now at Wellesley, Mrs. W. A. Disque, Mrs. Benjamin Harrison Lingo and Mrs. Virginia Armistead Nelson will also go to Richmond to attend the ceremonies.

Fete Planned at Brazilian Embassy

They'll be making merry with tears in their eyes tomorrow evening at the Brazilian Embassy, when the staff entertains at a farewell party for that popular father-and-son combination Brig. Gen. Amaro Soares Bittencourt and his son Capt. Kelvin Ramos Bittencourt, who with their wives will leave soon for their new stations at their home port, Rio.

The Bittencourts, who have served as Military Attache and Assistant Military Aattache, will be leaving town on October 25. Lieut. Col. Stenio Caio de Albuquerque Lima, will take over the duties as Military Attache, but the other post has not been filled.

Your Troubles Hearing From Soldiers Can't Be Bad as This

Don't get discouraged, girls, about this matter of hearing from that lad in the service.

If you don't get an answer from your last letter within the next 12 months ignore the implications, and consider the sad case of Lieut. John J. A. Lyons.

Someone wrote him a letter and addressed it to Fort Benning, Ga. But before it arrived he had been transferred to Atlanta.

Meanwhile, his old outfit was transferred to Australia. The Army postman lost track and forwarded the letter to the "Down Under" continent. On arrival there it was promptly sent back with the notation that Lieutenant Lyons was no longer with them.

The San Francisco postman received the letter next and sent it on to a Lieut. John Lyons in New York.

Said lieutenant was in Ireland. Off across the Atlantic went the letter and back again on the next boat.

In the interim, the first mentioned Lieutenant Lyons was sent back to Fort Benning and the letter finally caught up with him after round-tripping across three continents and two oceans.

Persistent fellows, these Army postmen. Just don't get discouraged, girls. That's all.

Transportation Problems Abound All Over Bermuda

Washington has no priority on transportation headaches.

From Hamilton, Bermuda comes word that the citizenry of that once autoless isle are already worrying about the problem of post-war continuance of motor transport. The last outpost of the horse-drawn vehicle, Bermuda was invaded by automobiles last year with the arrival of the United States armed forces and from the looks of things the "auto" is there to stay.

According to a report made by the Economic Advisory Committee on transportation, before the House of Assembly recently, the general use of automobiles after the war will depend on a number of things.

Mainly it will rest upon whether or not the United States authorities will contribute to the upkeep of the present roads and to the building of new ones. Bermuda's roadways were built for the lighter traffic of carriages and bicycles and will need considerable repairs for extensive use by automobiles and trucks.

As if to put off making a decision on so sweeping a change from the traditional, the committee has recommended consulting the American landowners on the island.

While Bermuda's problem is too many cars, Newport's transportation problem has been the usual too little gas and too little rubber. The residents of that staid New England resort have brought out their time-honored "electrics." On Long Island they are making good use of bicycles and in Virginia the pony-cart is being substituted for automobiles at resort centers.

President Vargas' Son Leaves Soon

Dr. and Mme. Luthero Vargas, who are guests this week of the Brazilian Ambassador and Mme. Martins, will leave this weekend for Brazil after a 10-month stay in the United States.

The son of Brazil's President, Dr. Vargas came to Washington on Monday from New York, where he has been studying at the Children's Clinic.

Mexican Envoy, Also Poet, Writes Song

And yet another accomplishment has been added to the already lengthy list of the Mexican Ambassador, Francisco Castillo Najera—he has written an exquisite corrido grande entitled "El Gavilan" (the Sparrow-hawk —but in this case the nickname of an individual which contains several hundred stanzas.

Under the title of "Mexico's Corrido Goes to War" is an interesting article in this month's Inter-American monthly anent the famed Mexican folk songs, the corrido, which is the most powerful means of informing the masses of news events, according to this story written by Ernest S. Hediger.

Sometimes a lone singer accompanies himself on his guitar and after the performance either makes a collection among the listening crowd of Indians and Mestizos or peddles the printed text of his song to the audience for a few centavos. More often men and women will sell the leaflets while they sing. And on other occasions the corridos are sung as a part of a regular show. And they are often pleasant interludes in the cockfights—still a popular pastime in rural Mexico.

But the world conflict has inspired many new corridos among the population of Mexico. There are two kinds of songs the corrido chico (or small) and the corrido grande which sometimes runs in to several hundred stanzas.

Nancy Shea Working on 'Women in Khaki'

In Washington for a few days is Mrs. Augustine Frances Shea, wife of Colonel Shea, who is taking a short rest as the house-guest of her cousin, Mrs. Frederick Ballard.

Mrs. Shea, who signs her books, Nancy Shea, has had a busy few months since her last visit to the Capital in July. After a tour through New England, she went to Des Moines to watch the WAACS in their training courses and also dropped in on the WAVES at Smith College. This is all preparatory to the book that she is now working on to be called, "Women in Khaki." It is due for publication later in the fall.

She already has two books to her credit, "The Army Wife," and "The Navy Wife," which she wrote in collaboration with Mrs. Bricoe Tye, wife of Vice Admiral Tyel. Mrs. Shea will leave Saturday for Boston where she is scheduled to speak to the Book Fair.

Allens to Live In Washington

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Allen, jr., whose marriage took place in Washington on October 10, will make their home here.

The former Miss Miriam Virginia Gumpert, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Augustus Gumpert, and Mr. Allen of Miami, Ariz., were married at an afternoon ceremony at which the Rev. John C. Palmer officiated. A reception at the Shoreham Hotel followed the ceremony. Mrs. Robert Hubbell was the maid of honor and only attendant and Frank A. Gumpert was the best man.

The bride attended George Washington University for two years and Mr. Allen was graduated in mining engineering from the University of Arizona. He is connected with the War Production Board here.

Lieut. Phelps And Bride Now On Wedding Trip

Fort Dix and the Army will claim Lieut. Robert Everett Phelps upon his return from a brief wedding trip. His bride, the former Miss Mary Dolores Carroll, will remain temporarily in Washington.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Rogers Carroll and Lieutenant Phelps is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Harvey Phelps of Chevy Chase. Only members of the immediate families and a few close friends attended their marriage on Saturday at St. Thomas' Church. The Rev. Joseph M. Moran officiated at the 10 o'clock ceremony and nuptial mass.

Owing to the illness of her father, the bride was given in marriage by her uncle, Louis Carroll of Baltimore. She was attired in a purple ensemble and wore a corsage of orchids. Her only attendant was her sister, Mrs. John E. McKeever, and Lewis Harvey Phelps, jr., served his brother as best man. A wedding breakfast followed at the Shoreham Hotel.

Hope Ridings Miller

A party with a purpose . . . a farewell-for-a-while fete . . . a tribute to China in general and to the Chinese Minister of Foreign Affairs particularly was the 5:30-to-7 get-together yesterday at which Lend-Lease Administrator Edward R. Stettinius, jr., and Mrs. Stettinius entertained almost 500 members of officialdom.

E. R. Stettinius

Guest of honor was Chinese Foreign Minister Dr. T. V. Soong, who will be off today for his homeland. Exactly why he is going and when he will return fall into that well-known category, State Secrets; but his pretty wife and family are remaining on in Washington. "And, of course, I hope he will be back soon," said Mme. Soong, as if she expected his swift return.

The west ballroom of the Shoreham was the scene of the fete, that got under way promptly at the opening hour, and gathered in several hundred guests before the final plate of hors d'ouvres was passed at shortly before 8 o'clock.

When I say Everybody (with a capital "E") was there, I mean virtually every upper-case personality whose name is identified with the war effort. I mean scores of men from the Lend-Lease office, the WPB, the OPA, the OWI—and what other alphabetical combinations have we?—and envoys from all the Allied nations and the neutrals, along with a number from the Supreme Court, the Senate, the House, the Army, Navy and every foreign mission now established in the Nation's Capital.

Standing to greet the hundreds of guests informally were the host and hostess and Dr. and Mme. Soong. Scores who went down that line stopped to chat with the Foreign Minister . . . and scores more took time out for a few words on the side with the host.

Dr. T. V. Soong

"I never saw more real people at any party in Washington," helpfully whispered the man who made the introductions as I passed down the receiving line. Half an hour later I was mentally agreeing with him down to the final syllable. Real people, people who count in the war effort, people upon whom the future of democracy depends in large part—were all over the place.

"There's General Marshall," was the whisper rippling through the throng, as the Army Chief of Staff stepped up to greet his host and hostess and the honor guests. Two minutes later, as he made his way across the room, the crowd gathered in on him. I never caught sight of him again. WPB Chief Donald Nelson met much the same fate, as did Gen. William Knudsen. Also completely surrounded from the moment they arrived were the Vice President and Mrs. Henry A. Wallace.

"Mme. Soong is the most beautiful Chinese woman I've ever seen," said the Ambassador of Uruguay, Dr. Juan Carlos Blanco, as he made note of her exquisite attire—a black satin sheath, accented with touches of crimson at the high neckline, and a flowing crimson chiffon handkerchief with sandals to match.

Mrs. Stettinius

Holding her own with the Chinese beauty, however, was Mrs. Stettinius, whose two-tone frock—dark blue and black—was street length and cut on simple lines. A fashion writer would have had a field day just jotting down some of the what-was-worn phases of the party. Truth is, I had about forgotten how lovely lovely ladies can look when they really make their minds up to it. But that's another story.

Personality kaleidoscope: The Soviet Ambassador and Joseph Davies, deep in talk and apparently oblivious to the crowd that surged around them . . . Justice Stanley Reed and James S. Knowlson surveying the crowd together . . . Mme. Espil, one of a sofa threesome that included Mrs. Reed and Mrs. Charles Carroll Glover . . . Justice Jackson, British Ambassador Viscount Halifax, Sir Clive and Lady Baillieu and Mrs. Henry Stimson in a little group clustered around one of the refreshment tables . . .

"Hello, vice admiral," said Mrs. John Towers, by way of greeting Admiral Emory S. Land. "It's not 'vice' yet," he corrected, "but thank you just the same." Senator and Mrs. Joseph O'Mahoney, Senator and Mrs. Burnet Maybank, Senator and Mrs. Walter George and Senator and Mrs. Tom Connally were among those representing the upper house of Congress. Representatives, meanwhile, seemed to be as numerous as Lend-Lease officials.

Mme. Soong

Field Marshal Sir John Dill and Lady Dill dropped in for the latter half of the party, as did Nelson Rockefeller, Mrs. James Byrnes, Sir Richard and Lady Fairey and Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins. Coming early, in order to get on to other appointments, were Dr. and Mrs. Stanley K. Hornbeck, Mrs. Henry Stimson and Mr. and Mrs. Daniel C. Roper. Justice Frank Murphy, who says he still doesn't feel natural out of uniform, got in just before closing time, but most of the guests were still there when he arrived.

"Well, if Dr. Soong has a list of guests from this party, Mme. Chiang Kai-shek will certainly know the most important contingent in the Nation's Capital turned out full force to tell her brother goodby," somebody observed. And it did.

Three Noted Authors at One 'Angel Table'

Hear ye, hear ye! You should been there last night for the grand opening of the series of "Famous Author Nights" at the American Theater Wing, Stage Door Canteen. It was a triple-header superproduction that not only provided two extra features but paid off in extra dividends to the lucky persons who attended.

Last night Authors W. M. Kiplinger, Herbert Corey and Marquis Childs shared honors and ovations from the Angel Table.

Frances Paperte Started It All

"Famous Author Night" was first inaugurated at the original Stage Door Canteen in New York, by Frances Paperte, National Chairman of Angel Tables. It proved to be such a success that Miss Paperte, a former star of the Chicago Opera Company, has come down to Washington to start off a similar series.

Created for the purpose of doing every one some good, the Famous Author Night permits a publisher to take a table for four for one evening in honor of his newest author, who brings three guests. The event gives the publisher and author an ovation and publicity and gives the Stage Door Canteen $100 cash in the till. It also gives a dividend to the holder of the lucky ticket; for as each Service man enters he is given a ticket. At 9 o'clock, when the drawing takes place, the lucky man wins a copy of the author's newest book, which the author promptly autographs.

Three Drawings, Three Winners

And last night, as a grand opening, was triple dividend night, for there were three drawings, three winners and three authors to autograph their latest work.

W. M. Kiplinger, head of the Kiplinger Washington Letter organization, autographed and presented a copy of his newest best seller, "Washington Is Like That;" Herbert Corey, associate editor of the Nation's Business, signed a copy of his "The Army Means Business," and Marquis Childs, Washington representative of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, affixed his John Hancock to his brand-new tome, just released yesterday, "I Write From Washington." And a good time was had by all.

Miss Toombs attended George Washington University and is president of the Luther Club of the university.

The wedding will take place next month.

Bradley-Henderson Rites Take Place at Epworth Methodist

Hessler Studio
MRS. WAYNE HOWSE BRADLEY

Wedding Reception Is Held at the Admiral Club

In a candlelight ceremony last evening at the Epworth Methodist Church, Miss Gwendolyn Lavenia Henderson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jessie E. Henderson, became the bride of Staff Sergt. Wayne Howse Bradley, son of Mr. and Mrs. Carl L. Bradley of Houston, Tex. The Rev. Harry Evual officiated at the 8 o'clock ceremony.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a gown of ivory faille taffeta trimmed in Chantilly lace. Her finger-tip veil fell from a coronet and she carried a bouquet of white roses and bouvardia.

The matron of honor, Mrs. Adrian W. McKnight, wore a gold taffeta dress with which she wore a matching headdress and she carried an old-fashioned bouquet of chrysanthemums in mixed colors. The bridesmaids, Mrs. John W. Sadler and Miss Blossom Millbrook, wore dresses like that of the honor attendant in blue and rose taffeta, respectively. Their bouquets were of bronze chrysanthemums. John W. Sadler served as best man and the ushers were Douglas W. Henderson and Ralph G. Henderson.

Following the ceremony a reception was held at the Admiral Club after which the newlyweds left on a brief honeymoon.

No Time for Blues About War With The Gildart Family

Petite, vivacious, blue-eyed Mrs. Robert C. Gildart isn't allowing any time for moping these days. Even though this widow of Colonel Gildart has two sons in the service in far countries, she keeps that sunny smile glowing and is constantly on the go.

Red Cross classes occupy a good bit of the time, and another share of her schedule goes into watching-out for the "best-gal" of one of her boys, her young daughter-in-law, Mrs. William J. Gildart, wife of Captain Gildart. Bill is now serving with the Coast Artillery, as was his father, and is stationed in Panama. Young Mrs. Gildart, the former Miss Edith Fitch, is here for the duration, and making her home with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. William R. Fitch on Lowell street, though she and Mother-in-law Gildart, the best of pals, get around together quite a bit.

Mrs. Gildart senior's other son, Major Robert O. Gildart jr., is now stationed in Hawaii and his wife and son, Robert 3d, are among the few families still permitted to remain in the islands.

Edward Van Devanter has invitations out for a late afternoon get-together on Saturday, October 24, at ths Sulgrave Club.

Minister Is 'Japanese Expert'

New Diplomat Is Authority On Far East

Has Served in Several Posts In the Orient

By Patricia Grady

Though asknowledged to be the greatest living Occidental scholar on Japanese history and culture, Sir George Bailey Sansom, the newly appointed Minister of the British Embassy, "doesn't know the answers" to the many questions about Japan that most non-Japanese experts answer so glibly.

Having just taken over his duties at the embassy this week as advisor on Far Eastern problems to the Ambassador, Sir George has the intellectual humility that is the trademark of all great scholars. "I really don't know,"—his answer to many queries about Japan—is not a diplomat's evasion, but is a student's honest appreciation of the complexity of the problems he has been dealing with for many years.

SIR GEORGE SANSOM

War in Pacific Was Inevitable

"History dictated the war in the Pacific," observes the simply spoken Sir George. "Through the centuries Japan has had an innate ambition to dominate Asia, but has had no outlet for that ambition. In the late nineteenth century when a centralized system of government started to build on the highly developed feudalism and when Western arms were available to implement the historic desire of Japan for domination, this clash was inevitable."

Accomplishing the feat of reading both ancient and modern Japanese—"It's largely a question of memory"—Sir George is credited by Japanese and Occidentals alike with having written the best book extant on Japanese history. "A Short Cultural History of Japan." That "short" is misguiding as the tone runs to over 700 pages. He is also the author of "A Historical Grammar of the Japanese Language," and of numerous dissertations on the language, literature and history of this increasingly important country.

Sir George and his wife have been in Washington for several weeks and prior to that were in New York, following a war odyssey in the Far East. After resigning from the British foreign service in 1940 he was given some special jobs to do by his government. One of these was as the civilian member of the war council in Singapore. He and Lady Sansom left Singapore just before its fall and went to Java, where General Wavell had set up new headquarters. But Java was not to withstand Japanese conquest for long and the Sansoms headed for Australia, where they remained for a time. Their next travel step was the United States.

Lady Sansom is quite a person in her own right. Her conversational Japanese is fluent and she is the author of a book about her experiences while living in Tokyo. Her husband unblushingly admits that she is something of a miracle woman. "Why, she found what I'm sure was the last available house in Washington," he boasts as proof of his point. They are already settled in a Chevy Chase house.

Talks Briefly on Post-War Problems

That the Japanese consider themselves to be a race set apart —a sort of Oriental version of the Aryan psychology—Sir George readily admits. Their myth of deified origin is part of the trappings of this attitude. What can be done about the debrutalization of the Japanese in the postwar? Sir George has his opinions about any such questions. "History cannot look ahead. We will have to deal with problems as they arise. Speculation is interesting but not very constructive."

Sir George started his career in the foreign service as a language officer in Japan in 1904 and held various consular posts throughout Japan and her territories until 1925, when he was made Commercial Counselor of the British Embassy in Tokyo. He served in that capacity until his resignation from the service. During the last war he served in the Admiralty and Intelligence Directorate of the War Office and in 1935-'36 was a visiting professor at Columbia University in New York.

Many Weddings on Calendar, Olivia Rhodes Takes Vows

Among the many service weddings that took place in the Capital the past weekend were Miss Lucie Hester Foster's marriage to Lieut. (j. g.) David Gregg Adams, jr., Miss Olivia Rhodes' wedding to Lieut. Raye Palmer Woodin, jr., and the marriage of Miss Leonore Estelle Sands to Vincent Joseph Reilly.

Miss Rhodes, who is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lovell Rhodes of Asheville, N. C., took her nuptial vows in the Mount St. Alban's Parish Church on Sunday afternoon. Her husband is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Raye Palmer Woodin of Flushing, Long Island. The Rev. Charles Warner officiated at the ceremony.

The bride attended St. Genevieve-of-the Pines in Asheville, and Sweet Briar College. A member of the Asheville Junior League, she was graduated from the school of journalism of the University of North Carolina. Lieutenant Woodin, who holds a reserve commission in the Marine Corps, attended the gunnery school at Washington, Conn., and was graduated from Williams College.

At the simple ceremony, Judge Foster gave his daughter in marriage and Miss Mildred Mohun was the maid of honor and only attendant. David Adams of Florence, S. C., served as best man for his son. Miller Foster, jr., a brother of the bride, was an usher.

Gregg—Foster

The home of the bride's parents, Judge and Mrs. Miller C. Foster, was the scene of the Saturday wedding of Miss Lucie Hester Foster and Lieut. David Gregg Adams. The Rev. Edward O. Clark was the officiating clergyman.

Reilly—Sands

With a simple ceremony in the rectory of the Holy Comforter Church, Miss Leonore Estelle Sands became the bride of Vincent Joseph Reilly, Saturday evening. The double ring service was used and the Rev. Edwin A. Luckett officiated.

The bride wore a pale blue costume suit with British tan accessories and a corsage of yellow-brown orchids. Mrs. Oscar Dean Field, jr., in brown with contrasting accessories and corsage of talisman roses, was the bride's only attendant. The best man was Lawrence Currington of Arlington, Va.

Mrs. Reilly, for the past year, has been employed in the Quartermaster General's Office of the War Department. Mr. Reilly, the son of the late Mr. and Mrs. James Patrick Reilly of Santa Fe, N. Mex., is connected with the Army Air Corps

Capital Picturegoers Have Something to Anticipate

'Random Harvest' Proves Film of First Rank; An Intellectual Canine Pays a Formal Call; Items of News and Gossip of the Theater

EXCEPT THAT "Tales of Manhattan" affords such an unusual quality of screen entertainment, it would be understandable if some might wish it would hurry itself along at Loew's Palace to hasten the advent of "Random Harvest."

RONALD COLMAN

Previewed in the plushy Paramount projection room Tuesday night before a considerable company, including Director Mervyn LeRoy and Genevieve Tobin, distinguished star of both stage and screen, this forthcoming Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer release revealed itself as one of the most substantial, soundest and most genuinely noteworthy romantic dramas of recent months. There is about it the same integrity in every aspect of production, acting, direction and photography that characterized "Mrs. Miniver," although the two stories are in no sense alike in any other respect.

Adapted from the James Hilton novel by Claudine West, George Froeschel and Arthur Wimperis—three-fourths of the screen authorship of "Mrs. Miniver"—"Random Harvest" provides Ronald Colman with the most perfectly fitting role he has encountered in seasons on end and enables Greer Garson to continue her brilliant career upon the same high level attained in the name part of "Mrs. Miniver." In the early sequences, as a touring music-hall player, she even sings and dances Harry Lauder's famous "She's My Daisy" number, attired in kilts that disclose new elements of the Garson charm. Director LeRoy explained that the present brevity of the costume was achieved only by a gradual process of attrition, beginning at the knees and involving protracted argument.

The casting of the entire picture—and everything else about it—is such as to take full advantage of the rich dramatic values inherent in one of the most engrossing love stories the cameras have recently unearthed.

Mr. LeRoy modestly brushes off the superior excellence of his most recent completed work by recalling that "the play's the thing, no kidding, and no director can whip up a masterpiece out of nothing. I was fortunate in getting hold of a magnificent story, which embodied such possibilities that we devoted nine months to the preparation of the script before the cameras ever began to roll." That is all very well, except that it rather belies Mervyn's directorial record that now spans practically two decades and includes such memorable films as "I Am a Fugitive from a Chain Gang," "Five Star Final," "Little Caesar" and scores of other memorable screen hits. His present visit to the Capital was inspired by "Mary Smith, U. S. A." briefly celebrated in this space yesterday. Producer Arthur Hornblow, Scripter Walter Reich and Director LeRoy came to town to get first-hand information on the life of the "Government girls" in Washington. They got it by exploring every official and off-duty activity in which the war workers engage. They visited a wide range of departments in which the war work centers, boarding houses, hotels, cafeterias, etc., etc., and feel now that they really know something of what a Government girl is all about. Maybe a picture worthy of Washington will come out of the enterprise. Mr. LeRoy thinks so.

A little misleading information crept into yesterday's remarks on the same topic through nobody's fault. Although Lana Turner is the star the boys have in mind, she will play "Miss Smith, U. S. A.," only if she proves to be absolutely right for the part in the light of what they have learned on their tour of personal investigation. And S. N. Behrman will not supply the dialogue for this picture. He will perform that chore for the new film version of "Quo Vadis," which the same interests also have on the fire. When Mr. Reich said that Mr. Behrman was writing the dialogue for "the picture," he was thinking of "Quo Vadis" when everybody else had "Miss Smith" in mind. Just one of those things, which hasn't done any harm so far as I can see.

And Some Say They Don't Think!

True to his word, Friday, the seeing-eye dog with Edward Arnold, as the blind detective, in "Eyes in the Night," opening today on the screen at Loew's Capitol, paid the desk a call yesterday afternoon and left the department in the grip of a violent inferiority complex. Here, my friends, is a dog. Son of the screen's famous Flash and now four years old, Friday has a mind like a steel trap. Responding instantly to the quiet suggestions of Owner Steuer—they were hardly commands—this splendid German shepherd, turned doorknobs with his teeth, betrayed evidences of vast affection for total strangers, discovered items of unsuspected interest in most unexpected places, played cripple, said his prayers, talked, and, best of all, seemed to derive a tremendous kick from demonstrating his intellectual capacity. He is a creature of great beauty, dignity and pride. Wonder what would have come off if he'd happened in last Monday afternoon when Miriam La Velle, the incomparable acrobatic dancer at the Earle, and her mother, were here with Penelope? "Penny" is a lot of dog, too. Almost a whole thimbleful, but smart.

Although not coming to Washington, Gertrude Lawrence will play an 11-day engagement in "Lady in the Dark" at Ford's Theater, Baltimore, beginning Tuesday night, October 27, with an extra performance on Sunday night November 1. If any of the service boys has a heart he is waiting to leave at the Stage Door Canteen, Monday night, October 26, would be a good time. Gertie Lawrence and the principals from her cast are planning to come over to the Washington canteen that night to put on a variety show. This should stimulate enlistments like nobody's business.

And that high-strung, Southern gentleman, Sam Galanty of Columbia Pictures, has issued elegant engravings for the advance screening of "You Were Never Lovelier," costarring Fred Astaire and Rita Hayworth, next Monday afternoon, to be followed by cocktails, buffet and airy persiflage at the Variety Club in the Willard. According to the likeness on the front of invitation, Rita never was!

HEDDA HOPPER

Hope Springs Eternal!

Hollywood, Calif., Oct. 14.—Bob Hope just can't get enough of Alaska. He wants to go back there next month, and thinks he'll be able to do his radio show from Fairbanks. They have a pretty good station up there now. It's owned by Cal Lathrop, who also owns the movie house. One of Colonna's pictures was being shown there. Bob said, "I want to see it." Cal took him over, and when they got there, said, "I own this, too." "Isn't that a blooming monopoly?" then Cal said, "Shhhhh! You're in Alaska, me boy!"

BOB HOPE

Bob looked up Corporal Nicoletti, a golfing pal of Bing Crosby and Fred Astaire, and got himself invited to a general's for dinner. When Nicoletti entered, he said, "Gosh—rugs!" when steak came on, he nearly swooned. The general asked him how the food was up his way, and the corporal said, "Oh, very good, sir—but fair!"

The thing that impressed Bob most was the spirit of the boys at Kodiak, where he gave a show at 10 a. m. in the pouring rain, with thousands sitting on the wet ground. At the end of the show, Bob said, "You've given me the greatest thrill I've ever had. Gosh—when I play under a big roof, with patrons sitting in plush seats, all they do is sneer at me!"

Frances Langford came home with more loot. They wanted to give her the Army. Bob swears she looks not more than 10 years old. "Why don't you go up with me, Hedda?" he said, "you'd come home looking as though you'd had your face lifted. Nothing as rejuvenating as having thousands of men scream "Hi, there, honey!" at you.

I asked about the weather, Bob said it was better than our summer here.

Well, blow me down! Lady Mendl, who used to dish out pagne, etc., is now dishing it the finest grub, vintage champout—coffee, not champagne—to our soldiers from behind the snack bar at the Hollywood canteen.

I understand Clark Gable has given a home to the widow of Otto Winkler. Otto was lost in the crash with Carole and had gone along at Clark's suggestion.

Dore Schary, Metro producer, gets into a perfect pet when his fan mail is addressed to him—"Miss Dora Sherry."

Ruth Selwyn, hearing how gay Mexico City was, couldn't miss it. She landed there yesterday, and is she giving it a whirl!

Cowboy Actor Art Davis had his 5-year option renewed the day he was drafted. That's timing. Kent Taylor has been signed to a term contract at Twentieth.

Drummer Bobby Rich returned that wrist watch Lana Turner gave him, but Steve Crane doesn't need it. He has a watch.

I hear John Huston, Walter's son, will soon be Alaska bound, to make a picture up there for the Government.

I hear Vic Mature's in the brig again—this time on bread and water.

LOUELLA O. PARSONS

Plan 'Horror' in Double Doses!

Hollywood, Oct. 14 (INS).—When I heard that Universal was combining their two favorite series characters—"The Wolf Man" and "Frankenstein"—in a chiller opus titled "The Wolf Man Meets Frankenstein" I could hardly keep my mind on the news for playing around with the idea. What an avenue of new plot ideas it opens up. How about "Kitty Foyle Meets Mr. Chips," or "Mrs. Miniver Catches Up With Sergeant York?" I also think "Rebecca Sees it Through With Yankee Doodle Dandy" has possibilities. But all kidding aside—let's get back to the authentic "U" idea:

EDDIE CANTOR

The horror pictures from this studio have made money hand over fist. So much, in fact, that not long ago the profits were all written up in a national magazine. Combining the two characters in one opus should really add up to a financial plum. Lon Chaney, jr., will be the "Wolf Man" who meets Bela Lugosi, the "Frankenstein," with Ilona Massey as the girl.

Over the long distance telephone to New York I was told that the Paramount-Selznick deal is cold because it necessitated Para making a separate deal with every star, every director and the writers of all the play material which Selznick owns. So David is coming back to produce "Jane Eyre" with Joan Fontaine.

He has been trying to borrow Walter Pidgeon for Rochester. That failing, he will have to look elsewhere. Why not Ronald Colman? He is wonderful in "Random Harvest." One of our friends said she fell all over again for Colman when she saw him in that picture.

There won't be a squawk out of Eddie Cantor on his movie, "My Life Is in Your Hands," for it is the story of his own life. We said in this column months ago that Eddie's next for Warners would be a sort of autobiography and it has taken the studio all these months to prepare the material. A very interesting biography appeared in one of the national magazines several years ago and this, of course, can be brought up to date. When the story is finished Warners have high hopes that the picture will be something along the lines of "Yankee Doodle Dandy," for Eddie has always contributed to charity and to Uncle Sam and to all right causes.

Pat Morison, who has nothing to do since she cams back from London except get her costumes for "Silver Skates," at Monogram, and read the script of "Heart of a City," is trying to get herself on an overseas broadcast immediately. Pat wants to explain something to all the American boys she met over there. "They asked me to take the names and addresses and telephone numbers of their mothers and girls and give them a ring," explains Pat.

But the British censors had other ideas. When her papers were inspected before sailing she was told that numerals must be censored because they might be secret codes—so poor Pat had to stand by while all those numbers that meant so much to the boys were torn up.

Chatter in Hollywood: Don't sell short the Arthur Hornblow, jr.-Bubbles Schinasi romance. When he went to New York he was out with her the first night, the next and the next and when she was here the two were also out practically every night together. Arthur, who is very intelligent and extremely attractive, is the type who would appeal to the little Schinasi girl, who has ambitions to become a writer.

Handicapped Honeymoon

Ray Montgomery, young Warner Brothers' contract player, now working in "Air Force," and who was married the day after the company returned from its Florida location, has been unable to shave during his honeymoon because his whiskers are a part of his make-up in the picture.

New York Calling—

New York, Oct. 14.

BERNARD BARUCH: H. G. S. Anderson of Tuskegee, Okla., for weeks has been trying to present his project for sponge-iron plants—but can't make any headway. One plant which he built for this vital product, a few years ago, is operating successfully. Anderson built it for the Emperor of Japan . . . HENRY MORGENTHAU, JR.: Mary C. McCall, jr., head of the Screenwriters Guild—22 per cent of whose members now are in the service—is in Washington this week to discuss the proposed freezing of high Hollywood salaries . . . TOMMY MANVILLE: The British reporters headlined the story of your sixth marriage this way: "Equals Record of Henry VIII."

LEOPOLD STOKOWSKI

REP. HAM FISH: A social club, of which you are an officer, will ask for your resignation from the membership roll . . . AL JOLSON: Russell Swan, the magician, has been commissioned as a captain in the Air Transport Command. His job will be to fly to those distant places where soldiers of the A. T. C. now are stationed, entertain them, and teach the group some of his 500 magic routines, so that they can entertain each other in the lonely hours . . . TOSCANINI: Saturday night Stokowski took the Los Angeles Symphony to the desert, to play Shostakovitch's Seventh to the thousands of armored troops on maneuvers. Even in the desert, at Stokowski's insistence, the musicians wore white-tie-and-tails.

MAYOR LAGUARDIA: Under Justice Byrnes' present plan, his newly created Board of Economic Stabilization will have only one regional office—and that one, in New York. They'll work out of Washington and Manhattan . . . JAMES C. PETRILLO: Because of the draft laws, Coq Rouge will install an all-girl orchestra of bluebloods, to be organized by Meyer Davis. The girls will have to be members not only of 802, but also of the 400 . . . ATTORNEY GENERAL BIDDLE: Last night's report was that your imminent plan to remove the enemy-alien status from Italians here will have a follow-up, concerning Jewish refugees and the German-born whose children are in the United States Army.

B'WAY, ASSN.: At Leon & Eddie's a ringsider threw a wet napkin at Eddie Davis, while the latter was entertaining. "In this place," Davis told the ill-mannered ringsider, "the only thing we throw is paper—money. And it goes to the Father Duffy Canteen." Davis raised $300 in contributions from the audience—including $25 from the napkin-thrower . . . PHIL MURRAY: John L. Lewis' friends insist that he next will try to invade your SWOC union . . . DICK MERRILL: Harry Richman, your trans-Atlantic colleague, went to a gym yesterday to toughen up in preparation for his entry into the Air Corps. At the first bend Richman tore a ligament.

CHARLES BUTTERWORTH: On the morning after your "Count Me In" opened co-producer Richard Krakauer had the drama-notices brought to him. The notices were all bad. Then the doorbell rang and Krakauer sighed: "Another bad notice." It was from his draft board . . . CHARLES CHAPLIN: When Orson Welles agreed to appear at your Carnegie Hall rally he received assurances that it was not to be a second front rally, and that he merely would introduce the speakers. But now that criticism has arisen Welles feels that he can't back out . . . GREER GARSON: Your "Mr. Miniver," Walter Pidgeon, at last has achieved stardom—in Dore Schary's "Bataan Patrol."

JOHN BENNETT: Tom Dewey met Dean Alfange at the Biltmore and asked: "How many votes do you think you'll get?" Alfange said: "Just enough to be elected" . . . "Do you really believe that?" asked the surprised Dewey . . . "Yes. Just enough votes," replied Alfange. "And you and Bennett can split the rest" . . . EQUITY: Despite the flop of his recent "Priorities," Clifford C. Fischer will try his fourth vaudeville show—featuring Ann Corio, the stripper; Chester Morris, Jane Froman and Frank Fay . . . SERGT. GARSON Kanin: Remember "Brother Rat," the hit play you helped direct? Coauthor Fred F. Finklehoffe now plans to revive it here as a musical comedy.

LOUIS SHURR: When Robert Hopkins, the screenwriter, heard that you are being drafted, he said: "There must've been a Jap on that draft board" . . . PAUL V. McNUTT: Because of the importance of your Manpower Mobilization Board, two forgotten Government bureaus—Census and Labor Statistics—soon will receive new recognition . . . COL. DARRYL ZANUCK: Ted Paramore, the screenwriter you signed some time ago, just inherited 5 million dollars. When he was warned that, after taxes, he'd receive only one million, the screenwriter said: "But that ain't scripts" . . . JIMMY CAGNEY: Wynn Murray, who began a reduction treatment by your doctor-brother two years ago, this week decided to call a halt. She dropped 125 pounds.

Broadway Beauty Debuts in Screen Spectacle

By Ernest L. Schier

Far removed from the minds and imagination of the average American is the unique, and sometimes stirring, story of man's battle against the elements on the small islands off the coast of Scotland. The saga of a community's struggle to wrest a living from the barren land of Foula, battling the bare rock, as well as the lashing sting of the Atlantic and the ever encroaching lure of the outside world, "Edge of the World" is in essence the tale of a struggle for survival.

Tribal in its customs, the small group of hardy men who for many generations had peopled the island are faced with the very loss of their existence as their crops become smaller, steam trawlers poach on their fishing grounds and the outside world calls to their younger members. In the end, the battle fails and the group evacuates to the mainland.

The conflict between the older generation and the younger runs symbolically throughout the story. The son of the elder wishes to leave the island and marry. He is persuaded by his best friend to settle the argument by a race up the side of the cliff, in which he loses his life. The victor is refused permission to wed the elder's daughter and leaves the island. Returning in the face of a raging storm he saves the life of his baby and assists the people to leave.

The grandeur of the natural settings of "Edge of the World" are overwhelming. The bleak cliffs are awe-inspiring as they reveal the reality of their danger in the climbing contest. Storms at sea, the fog that is forever overhanging the land, are all an important part of the film.

Zola Story Added

Fascinating is the authentic picture of the primitive life; the small "kirk," the cliff-top discussion of community problems, the small boats battling the monstrous seas.

Less a photoplay than a social document, the picture nonetheless has some excellent scenes and fine character studies. The elder's round of the island bidding the neighbors to his son's funeral, the observance of the Sabbath and the shearing of the sheep are outstanding.

In addition to the people of the Island of Foula the cast includes John Laurie, as the elder; Eric Berry and Belle Chrystall, as his children, and Niall Macginnis, as the rebel.

On the same bill at the Pix Theater is Emile Zola's "The Human Beast," starring Jean Gabin and Simone Simon. The story is an excellent psychological study of a man who is obsessed with the idea that he must suffer for the generations of his family before him, who were drunkards and degenerates. Failing in love with the wife of a friend, he grasps at a few moments' happiness, only to fall a victim of his hereditary curse.

Flies a Clipper

George Tobias has solved the problem of keeping his own beard in the stubble growth stage needed for his role in "Air Force" by using ordinary hair clippers on his chin and cheeks. He gives himself a facial haircut every other morning on the set.

Gentlemen of the Press Are That in New Films

By Melrose Gower

Hollywood, Oct. 14.—Any cinema newspaperman, even Frank McHugh on his best celluloid bender, could knock out this story in nothing flat. But your correspondent, being merely a run-of-the-mill reporter and not geared to the ready turn of thought and high pitch of speed characteristic of movie Fourth Estaters, is having difficulty with same.

The story has to do with the passing of the old metropolitan city room from the screen, and with it the passing also of the frowsy motion picture star reporter. You remember a typical scene, of course?

Newspapers litter the floor. Huge wastebaskets are overflowing with scrap paper. Proofs are hanging on clips all over the room where no proofs ever should hang. The head of the copy desk is sitting in the slot chewing a ham-on-rye. The telegraph editor is excitedly bellowing, "Flash! Flash!" as he runs yards of tape from a teletype machine through his fingers. The city editor is yelling into the 'phone:

"Hey, Sam, stop the presses! Throw out that dam' traffic crash! Replate Page One!"

Enter the Star Reporter

Enters, then, the handsome but upkempt movie star reporter, three pencils in his breast pocket, a wad of copy paper in his side pocket, a press card in the dirty band of his battered felt hat. He pounds the city editor violently on the back, calls him a "dirty old so-and-so," rushes to a typewriter and bangs out 2500 words in five minutes. Then he crosses the room, slings a leg over the desk of the lovely new girl reporter, chucks her under the chin, says:

"Baby, let's you and me slip down to Sloppy Joe's and celebrate." Well, those days, those scenes, are gone forever—or at least for the duration. The scabrous scribe of the screen has become a nattily-attired foreign correspondent, as witness the current film status of Cary Grant, Bob Hope Clark Gable, Robert Sterling, Robert Young, Dana Andrews.

Tall-dark-and-handsome Cary Grant is engaged for the moment portraying Foreign Correspondent Patrick O'Toole in RKO-Radio's "Once Upon A Honeymoon." He never enters the city room. He gathers his news in Vienna, Warsaw and other European cities, broadcasts it by short wave radio to his newspaper syndicate in America. You see him covering the news of the day, carefully, quietly, thoroughly, on the scene where it happens.

Fairly Well Dressed

Correspondent O'Toole is dressed as the best newspapermen always have dressed. Tweeds, sack suits, soft hats predominate; plain white shirts with soft collars attached; good-looking four-in-hand ties, for the most part.

Correspondent O'Toole falls in love with Katie O'Hara, played by beautiful Ginger Rogers. But our hero does not chuck Katie under the chin on first meeting, nor does he suggest that Sloppy Joe's is an ideal place to take a charming young woman.

Bob Hope is assisting Grant quite materially in smashing the Hollywood myth about newspapermen. Bob, co-starring with Dorothy Lamour in the Sam Goldwyn production, "They Got Me Covered," is playing a foreign correspondent who uncovers a spy ring while visiting his girl friend in Washington. The effervescent Hope plays it up to the hilt for comedy, of course—but there isn't a note in his sartorial ensemble that would cause a regular reader of Esquire to shudder. His clothes are tailored, well pressed; he matches his socks and ties. Bob doesn't wander around writing things down while people talk to him. He doesn't carry a pencil—he borrows one.

Roam the World

War correspondent brothers are Clark Gable and Robert Sterling in "Somewhere I'll Find You," recently released by Metro. They stroll the world over, from Europe to Bataan, well-groomed, capable, at ease.

Robert Young, appearing in "Journey for Margaret," is a smart, honest American correspondent in England; a gentleman with no delusions of journalistic grandeur. The same may be said for Dana Andrews, playing the title role for Fox in "Berlin Correspondent."

The city room of the movies is gone. The turning cameras now follow the newspaperman far afield. Quentin Reynolds, Bill Shirer, H. R. Knickerbocker, Bill Hillman and Leland Stowe have removed the curse of Hildy Johnson.

Picture Boasts World-Famed Cast

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer is known for its imposing array of star names yet never in its illustrious history has it ever assembled such a noteworthy group as may be seen in the John Nesbitt Passing Parade, "The Film That Was Lost."

Among the celebrities included are Queen Victoria, William Jennings Byran, Theodore Roosevelt, Thomas Edison, Woodrow Wilson, Czar Nicholas, Rasputin, King George V and other dignitaries of the past.

"The Film That Was Lost" glorifies the permanent film library of the Museum of Modern Art where outstanding events originally recorded on film are preserved. It was from the source that M-G-M obtained its all-star cast.

Witchery

BARBARA MOFFETT takes time out from RKO-Radio's "Red River Robin Hood," starring Tim Holt, to foreshadow the coming of Halloween. So that's a witch!

'Our Gang' Moppet Role in 'Salute'

Discovered in Our Gang comedies six months ago, eight-year-old Bobby Blake was recently assigned his second feature picture screen role.

He'll have an important part in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "Salute to Marines," now in production.

The young actor was jumped from an Our Gang member over night to play the title role in "Mokey" with Donna Reed and Dan Dailey, jr. Taking advantage of his break, Bobby scored in the picture, and as a result Director S. Slyvan Simon has selected him to portray a young friend of Wallace Beery in the Technicolor Marine story.

Dear Walt Disney!

Rumor has it that "Bambi" is to be your final feature length production. Hundreds of our patrons have asked me to appeal to you to change this decision and that you will produce at least one such feature each year.

Will the fact that we are continuing "Bambi" for a THIRD WEEK sway you in this regard? We all hope so!

Cabmen Deny Gaming Den Tieup, Assert Passengers Paid for Trip

Two Washington cab drivers admitted in sworn statements yesterday that they transported three men to Mike's place, a Maryland gambling establishment, last Friday and Saturday nights.

Though they admitted the trips, they denied the rides constituted the ferry service exposed by The Post.

Both men asserted they were paid for the rides by their passengers, who were unknown to them.

The two hackers, Harry Chatlin of 1537 C Street Southeast and James H. Moreland of Capitol Heights, Md., said they were the operators of Yellow Cabs 644 and 7, respectively, the same vehicles reported by Post reporters as providing free transportation to and from Mike's.

Start Off With Denial

Both preceded their affidavits with the flat statements, "I hereby state that I have never been hired or employed by the month, week, day, hour or trip by any gambling house to transport passengers to or from said gambling house here or elsewhere."

Chatlin's statement continued: "On Friday, October 9, about 10 p. m. I was approached at Eleventh Street and North Carolina Avenue Southeast, by a man who requested me to drive him to Mike's Place . . ."

The driver said when they arrived the passenger told him to wait and that about 15 minutes later the passenger returned with another man. He drove to Eleventh Street and North Carolina Avenue, Chatlin stated, where the original passenger got out and that he continued to Sixth and A Streets Southeast, with the second man. This latter gave him $2.50, he said, covering the trip out and back and the wait.

Says Passenger Paid

Moreland made two trips, he said, one on Friday night and one on Saturday. In his statement, he said:

"Friday night a gray-haired man, wearing glasses, asked me to drive him to Mike's place in Maryland. I transported the passenger to this point and was paid $1.25 for the trip by the passenger. . . .

"As I was driving away the passenger called to me. He got back into the cab and rode back to Washington.

"On Saturday another man asked me to take him to Mike's and when we got there, the yardman would not let anyone in. I drove him back to Eighth Street and Pennsylvania Avenue Southeast, where he paid me $1.25.

"As each passenger had paid me for the trip to Mike's place and because I had to return to Washington, no charge was made for the return trip."

Sergt. Joseph Harrington, chief of the Hack Inspector's Office, obtained the affidavit in compliance with an order from Maj. Edward J. Kelly, superintendent of police for a "thorough investigation" of The Post's expose of the gambling joint ferry service.

Edmund C. Barwell, manager of the Yellow Cab Co., declared that the Yellow Cab Co. has never entered into "any agreement with any gambling house, whereby patrons would be transported by Yellow Cabs.

"These reports," Kelly declared, "will be forwarded to the Hacker's Revocation Board for whatever action they see fit. The authority to revoke or suspend cab drivers' licenses rests with the board."

Medical Man To Testify in License Case

Charged with practicing medicine here without a District license, Dr. Frank Caprio, 36, of 2480 Sixteenth Street Northwest was expected to take the witness stand in his own behalf today in his trial before Municipal Court Judge Robert E. Mattingly.

Assistant United States Attorney John L. Ingoldsby closed the Government's case yesterday after introducing testimony by Detective Sergt. H. H. Carper, who said he went to Dr. Caprio's apartment July 13 and, posing a patient, received treatment and paid Dr. Carpio $5.

Dr. Caprio holds a license to practice in New Jersey.

Paul Foley, assistant secretary of the Commission on Licensure, told the court that Dr. Caprio had applied for a license, but was turned down, because certain statements in the application did not check with New Jersey records. Foley said the apparent discrepancy later was explained, and Dr. Caprio was notified he could renew his application. However, the physician was charged with violation of the Healing Arts Practice Act, on evidence furnished by Carper.

Under cross-examination by Defense Attorney Samuel F. Beach, Foley said there was no question as to Dr. Caprio's qualifications as a physician. Caprio had received his M. D. degree at George Washington University and had studied at the University of Pennsylvania, in Vienna, and at the Mayo Brothers Clinic in Rochester, Minn. He served recently as a Medical Corps captain stationed at Walter Reed Hospital.

At the close of the Government's case yesterday, Beach moved for dismissal of the case on the ground that the alleged violation would not have been committed if Dr. Caprio had not been "entrapped" by Carper's ruse. Judge Mattingly deferred action on the motion until today, to allow counsel to prepare arguments on whether the question of "entrapment" is involved in the case.

Violation of the Act is punishable by a maximum sentence of 90 days in jail or a fine of $100, or both.

Mrs. Hugh Rodman Will Be Buried In Arlington

Mrs. Elizabeth S. Rodman, widow of Admiral Hugh Rodman, commander of the American fleet operating with the British Navy in the World War, will be buried in Arlington Cemetery after services today at 11 a. m. at Fort Myer Chapel.

Mrs. Rodman died Tuesday at her residence in the Westmoreland Apartments, 2122 California Street Northwest, after a short illness. She was 81 years old October 5.

A native of Franklin, Ky., the former Elizabeth Ruffin, descendant of an old Virginia family of that name, she married Admiral Rodman more than 50 years ago when he was an ensign. He died two years ago, also at the age of 81. During her husband's 47 colorful years in the Navy, she followed him to many far points of the earth. In 1937 he was one of the official representatives of the United States at the coronation of King George VI.

They had no children.

Two Painters Held

Airman Identifies Stolen Gems

A string of pearls valued at $2000—identified as his by Wing Commander H. C. Bevans, New Zealand Air Force last night—was found among the loot from 50 burglaries allegedly committed by two 27-year-old painters being held by police of the Eighth Precinct.

Commander Bevans lives at 2901 Woodland Place Northwest.

Other victims of the robberies continued to identify stolen jewelry and other articles at the Eighth Precinct where a room has been set aside to house the recovered valuables.

Among those to identify stolen articles were Sir Owen Chalkley, 3010 Cleveland Avenue Northwest, with the British Embassy; Donald Richberg, 4800 Woodway Lane Northwest, former administrator of the NRA; Harry Brimer, 4909 Linnean Avenue Northwest; Scott Appleby, 2501 Thirtieth Street Northwest, a retired real estate dealer, and C. A. Wingfield, 1331 Geranium Street Northwest.

A gold police badge, found in the possession of the two painters when arrested, led to the solution of a year-old robbery at the home of James E. Colliflower, 8050 Parkside Lane Northwest.

The badge had been presented to Colliflower, who is chairman of the District salvage drive, by Ernest W. Brown, when the latter was superintendent of police. It was engraved with Colliflower's name.

Imported whiskey, lingerie and silk stockings were among the articles taken.

More than 50 per cent of the property which had been reported stolen was recovered at the rooming house in the 1400 block of N Street Northwest, where the two painters were arrested.

Later this week police will take the pair to New York where they said more of the lot was concealed. This will cause delay of a week at least before the men are formally charged with the robberies.

Young Slayer Now Faces Trial For Robbery

Guy E. Oden, youthful former theater usher, who is serving a sentence of 5 to 15 years for slaying his 15-year-old girl friend on July 19, 1941, will stand trial in District Court soon on a charge of robbery.

Assistant United States Attorney Bernard Margolius, who prosecuted the murder case, said yesterday the new trial had been set tentatively for October 26 before Justice James M. Proctor.

The 20-year-old defendant is under indictment on a charge of holding up and robbing Ida Lee, an employe of the Smith Cleaners, 725 B Street Southeast. The alleged robbery involved $22, the indictment stated, and occurred July 15, 1941—four days before Oden fired four shots at Ellen Reid Cannon in the kitchen of 114 O Street Southwest.

Oden was convicted of manslaughter June 10 and received the maximum sentence from Justice F. Dickinson Letts. On September 20, 1941, Oden had been found guilty of first degree murder and sentenced to death, but defense attorney James J. Laughlin won a new trial on the basis of conflicting testimony of the slain girl's sister.

Potomac Flood Unlikely, Says Weather Bureau

The Potomac River is expected to reach a high-water mark slightly under six feet at the Leiter Gauge, five miles above Washington this morning, the Weather Bureau said last night. Flood stage is 10 feet. The bureau, however, said that no flood is indicated in the Potomac although smaller tributaries nearby may go over their banks.

At Highway Bridge clearance between the river and the bridge registered slightly more than 15 feet at high tide at 12:52 a.m. today, about two feet above normal.

The rainfall during 24 hours ending 1:30 p.m. yesterday, the bureau said, measured slightly more than two inches here.

It was reported from Winchester, Va., that rivers in Frederick County are at flood stage and that traffic on some highways was blocked. Heavy loss to the apple crop is foreseen, it was said.

Federal Workers Will Take Chest X-ray Tests

Due to the increased danger of tuberculosis arising from crowded living conditions and strain of war work here, health officials will conduct chest X-ray examinations of Washington Government employes, beginning today.

The first group to be examined will be at the Government Printing Office, under an arrangement made by Dr. George Ruhland, District health officer, and the United States Public Health Service with Dr. George F. Waite, GPO medical officer. It is planned to conduct similar surveys in other Government departments.

Under a new procedure, it is possible to examine 400 to 500 persons daily at a small fraction of the cost of methods previously employed, it was said.

Early House Action on Job Probe Seen

The proposal of Representative Ramspeck (Democrat), of Georgia, to launch a continuing and thoroughgoing investigation of Federal personnel practices was given the approval of the House Rules Committee yesterday.

With the rule granted on the resolution, paving the way for early consideration by the House, Ramspeck said that he would try to bring the measure up this week and get the probe under way at once.

His resolution directs the Civil Service Committee, of which he is chairman, to examine the various classifications of Government jobs, the efficiency with which they are performed, and their necessity.

It was prompted by the barrage of criticism which has been leveled at allegedly needless and admittedly enormous increases in Federal personnel, coupled with charges that many workers are doing nothing but drawing pay.

Concerning the projected probe, Ramspeck told the Rules Committee:

"This ought to keep some Government departments from hiring great masses of people indiscriminately without thoroughly studying the need for them. Many people in Government service are themselves complaining about waste of manpower. For example, a man came to my office and said that he had been unemployed for two months and they wouldn't give him anything to do.

"I believe these stories should be investigated, and if they are found true, the situation should be corrected."

He explained that he would ask the aid of personnel heads in all Federal departments in carrying on the probe, which he said would probably be begun by circulating questionnaires to all agencies in order to obtain a fund of preliminary data.

Representative Sabath (Democrat), of Illinois, Rules Committee chairman, estimated that the probe might result in a saving of "millions upon millions of dollars" to the Government.

Michael's Girl

By

SOPHIE KERR

Buschke Photo

In 1924 Elin Bryant first seriously questioned the stability of her marriage to Philip, whose one goal was money while hers was to make a home for their son, Van. She hired Michael Rodo on trial as gardener and allowed him the cottage as a home for his little girl, Keith. Meanwhile, Philip was planning a house party and asked Elin to invite some woman friend, so she suggested Katie Thomson. Michael made himself continually useful and, with Letty, rose high in Van's affections. Michael was strict with his gril and asked favors of no one in her care and education, but Elin was fond of Letty and supervised her to some extent.

CHAPTER VI.

THE thought of the house party reminded her of Katie Thomson. Philip would be pleased if she could tell him Katie was coming. So she went to the telephone.

First she tried Katie's New York apartment. The maid in charge said that Katie was at her house in the Hudson Valley. This entailed negotiation with long-distance and then with the local operator. "Miss Thomson does not receive in-coming calls," said the far-away voice. "She'll receive this one," said Elin. "Tell her it's her old friend Elin Morris."

Almost at once she heard Katie's voice, high and clear. "Why, darling, how wonderful to hear from you—I was bored to death with myself! Are you somewhere near? Do come right along over here if you are; I'm per-ish-ing to see you! It's been ag-es!"

"This is a voice from our mutual dark pasts, Katie," said Elin. "I was wondering if you wouldn't pay me that long-promised weekend?" She went on to explain, with emphasis on the money and importance of the guests.

Katie was receptive. "But of course, darling, it will be simply divine! I'd adore to come. No, I haven't a play yet; I'm reading scripts like mad and such tripe! It will be too heavenly to be away from everything for a weekend and pretend I'm a woman who actually has time for a visit, like anyone else! Just remind me a day or two in advance and tell me when I'm expected and I'll be there. What fun to see you again!"

Elin put down the receiver with a broad smile. Katie hadn't changed a bit; she had always exaggerated and protested—it didn't mean a thing. She had always liked and courted rich people, for she had been poor and she loved luxury. Elin had been her roommate and loaned her clothes and money and there had been a feeling of real friendship between them. Katie had worked hard and done well against big odds and, like most stage people, she was alive and vital and eager to please and entertain every audience, in the theater and out. She'll liven up the house party, all right, thought Elin. And I hope this Tench man finds her very, very charming.

Elin Buys New Clothes

The house party preparations went forward uneasily, for Philip interfered in every detail. He issued commands to Elin about everything. "Get some new clothes, something swank that shows how much it cost. You go around in those shirtwaisty things too much. And have all the silver out, and buy some of those enormous English bath towels. And do try to get the house looking a little less like old Grandpa Bryant."

With outward compliance Elin spent more than she liked for four dresses, ordered new supplies of household linen, checked over the china and glassware, bought new vases, engaged an extra waitress and conferred at anxious length with Patsy on menus. Philip investigated the cellar; it was the one item that quite satisfied him. "Thank God I don't have to get any bootleg poison," he said. "Father and Grandfather did a swell job laying down hard stuff and I certainly was smart to buy so much wine before this fool law was passed. Remember how extravagant you thought I was? It's mighty handy to have something to serve that won't take the enamel off your teeth or make you blind. Young Van is going to grow up knowing what's what when it comes out of a bottle."

He even dictated the sleeping arrangements! "Give Tench and the Parks the rooms overlooking the garden and let the Coulters have one on the other side—it doesn't matter where they are; this party's to Doug's interest as much as mine." Every day when he came home he brought something: cards and score pads, special cigarettes and cigars, ash trays, an out-size cocktail shaker, the newest phonograph records. "You've let everything run down," he reproached Elin. "This place is a relic, not a house."

Perhaps I have let things run down, thought Elin, but this house is so distinguished and beautiful as it is, it can't be dolled up like a chorus girl's face. She loved the house. Old Philip Van Dyne Bryant the first had built it, well and lavishly. Since he enjoyed bowling and billiards, he had half filled the ground floor with a double bowling alley and a wide, comfortable billard room. On the floor above were the great hall, the drawing room and dining room opening together, with an office-library at the side. The kitchen, the servants' hall and the pantries were on this floor, too, and the living veranda which overlooked the garden went all along one side. The staircase in the great hall was 8 feet wide with a square landing at the turn, easy to walk and a spectacular background for women's evening dresses. Everything was solid and spacious and first quality.

The House Is Refurnished

Old Van Dyne's furniture and household had held up well through the three generations that had used them. He had not been seduced by the massive baroque and papier-mache of his own day but had copied the paneling and carving and hangings and furnishings of Georgian England with a leaning toward the more austere of that time. Elin loved the square, stately rooms and the mollowness of time on wood and metal; wherever she had needed to restore and replace she had kept it subdued and in key with what was there before. Now she tried, without much success, to look at it with Philip's critical eyes and to efface what he thought shabby. She bought new curtains and cushions and hangings with as much restraint as he would permit and he grumbled about it, but in the last effect she triumphed. The rooms were smartened, not spoiled.

Outside in the garden she had a greater anxiety. Its neglect before Michael's hiring still marked it in spite of his work and care and the weather had turned scorching hot; his newer plantings were burned up, though he ran the sprinklers tirelessly.

"The earth knows the difference between water from the skies and water from a pipeline," Michael said in disgust, "and it just laughs at all the dust-mulching I do. Nature can be a crooked old witch, ma'am."

"Building himself an alibi," said Philip when Elin repeated this to him. "You can tell him for me that if the garden looks bad for the party he's going out on his neck."

"Oh, come now," countered Elin. "Michael doesn't make the weather."

The enmity of Philip against Michael was usually repressed, but at this it flared out again. He said sharply: "Michael may not make the weather, but a good gardener makes a good garden, and I'm fed up with having ours look like a shambles. He could do something about it if he had any real ability. He soldiers worse than Tom ever did. When this party's over I'll take things in hand." There was ultimatum in his voice.

The Problem Of the Garden

Elin looked at the garden with more and more depression. The hot dryness had brought a plague of insects that grew daily hungrier and more numerous. A fat turquoise-and-gold worm that could eat the leaves off an ordinary plant in half an hour appeared and spread devastation. Whenever she could find a spare minute Elin took a can of kerosene and a wooden fork and picked off the horrid creatures, and Michael dusted and sprayed and muttered what sounded like spells against them. But the garden looked always more gnawed and sad and ragged and Philip centered his temper more and more on Michael because of it. Michael kept out of Philip's way as much as he could, answering his sharp comments, when he had to answer, with patience, otherwise keeping what Philip chose to call a disrespectful silence.

"The man's insolent," he declared more than once. "He's hiding behind your kindness, Elin. He counts on your being sorry for the little girl and putting up with him because of her. I'll be glad to see the last of both of them."

Everything else was enough to Philip's liking: the changes in the house, the menus, the new waitress—they would, he said, all do. And Katie Thomson hadn't backed out. Everything would do them sufficient credit except that abdominable garden.

Two days before the party, Michael came up to the house and asked if Mrs. Bryant would be so good as to speak to him. Elin found him on the lower terrace looking sadly over his ravaged domain.

"I've been hoping that the weather and the bugs might let up, ma'am," he said, "but I guess they got it in for us. The garden looks terrible, there's no getting round it. But there's one way I can fix it, if you'll spend the money. I can go round to all the nurseries in 50 miles or so and gather up their best things, pot them up, or get them ready potted, and I'll set the whole shebang right into the ground in pots and stake and water them and they'll certainly hold up over the weekend and nobody be the wiser."

"Oh, why didn't I think of that!" cried Elin. "Of course—go ahead—I don't care what it costs. But it's a frightful task; you'll never get it done."

"I'll get men to help from the nurseries, ma'am. I'll buy today and fetch back all I can—I can hire a truck down in the town, ma'am—and for the rest we can get delivery tomorrow and by evening, when the ladies and gentlemen come, it'll be done. But it'll be costly."

To Be Continued.

Listen! with Glynn

A certain business concern which sponsors two very fine programs over WJSV and the Columbit network is particularly interested in having you listen to them within the next week or so.

As is the way with business concerns, it has what it considers to be a very excellent reason for your doing said listening and—while we don't want to give away any business secrets—that reason is that the WEEK, starting today, is the week of weeks for the same business concern.

Not to beat around the bush (maybe we should say vine in this case) any longer, the WEEK is "Tomato Soup Week" and the insidious reason that the sponsor would like you to listen to his programs is that during that WEEK he is making special effort to see that you become better acquainted, through sales and promotion and that sort of thing, with the benefits that can be accrued from the excellence of tomato soup.

For your further information, the WEEK, for some reason, runs from October 15 through October 24. And in our sly way we'll give you just the smallest hint as to who the sponsor is when we tell you that his programs are "Amos 'n' Andy," heard over WJSV at 7 every night, and "The Radio Reader's Digest," heard every Sunday over WJSV at 9 p. m.

For the remainder of this space, we should like to point out to you that "Amos 'n' Andy" have been on the networks for well over 14 continuous years—which means that they must be pretty good. They've broadcast practically 4000 scripts and have been the voices of approximately 550 different characters in their fabulous saga of mythical Harlem. And they're going as strong as ever.

"The Radio Reader's Digest" is something new on the air. With Conrad Nagel as master of ceremonies and narrator, it began on Columbia just a month ago. Noted actors of stage, screen and radio have taken part in its dramatizations of stories from the pages of the popular periodical, "The Reader's Digest," and the indications are that the show itself approaches the popularity of that more visual means of entertainment.

James Hurst Is Dead at 63; Va. Educator

By the Associated Press

Norfolk, Va., Oct. 14.—James Hurst, 63, widely known educator and for the last 25 years superintendent of the Norfolk County schools, died at a Norfolk hospital today following a heart attack. He was stricken en route to his office and died soon after being admitted to the hospital for treatment.

A native of the Northern Neck of Virginia, Mr. Hurst was born near Kilmarnock. He attended the College of William and Mary. After graduation Mr. Hurst came to Norfolk and entered the city school system. He was principal of the Chapel Street School when he was selected as superintendent of the Norfolk County schools. He succeeded A. H. Foreman as head of the county system.

Denton M. Schupp

Williamsport, Md., Oct. 14.—Denton M. Schupp, 88, former C. & O. Canal boatman, and later a flour and grain dealer, died yesterday at his home here.

Corn and Hay Harvest in Va. 90% Completed

By the Associated Press

Richmond, Va., Oct. 14.—The Virginia Cooperative Crop Reporting Service said today Virginia corn cutting was about 90 per cent completed "and it seems likely now that very little more will be cut."

Lespedeza hay harvesting also was reported about 90 per cent completed and soybean hay harvesting about 80 per cent. Apple picking was reported half finished in the northern counties and two thirds completed for the State as a whole.

A little over half of the peanut crop has been dug and half the cotton has been picked. Sweet potato digging made good progress last week, and seeding of winter wheat, oats and barley was reported in progress in all sections.

The crop service said soil moisture was generally ample throughout the State and that fall pastures were "excellent."

Loudoun Sets School Opening Back to 9:30 A. M.

Special Dispatch to The Post

Leesburg, Va., Oct. 14.—The Loudoun County School Board, in session here yesterday, changed the opening of the school hour to 9:30 a. m., and transacted other business.

The 9:30 a. m. opening hour will start Monday, October 19, and continue through Monday, November 30, 1942. This hour supplants the 10 a. m. opening which had been in force since October 1.

The superintendent of schools in cooperation with the public relations committee of the County Education Association was given the authority to request the county board of supervisors to make available an additional sum of $14,000 during the current year for increased remuneration for teachers.

The following appointments were made: Walter L. Turner, agriculture at Lovettsville and Leesburg; Miss Gladys Pearson, teacher at Bluemont; Robert A. Dordet, Leesburg High School teacher; Mrs. Dorothy B. Hansbarger, Round Hill teacher; I. V. D. Foote, bus driver, and John Henry Furr, janitor at Waterford.

The resignations accepted included that of Frances Everhadt at Bluemont; John Diedrich at Leesburg, and William Hopkins, Aldie and Ashburn.

Va. Methodists Vote Earlier Meeting Date

By the Associated Press

Richmond, Va., Oct. 14.—The Virginia Methodist Conference voted 278 to 254 today to break a century-old practice and hold its annual sessions hereafter in August or September, instead of October.

The original proposal, presented from the Newport News-Portsmouth district by District Superintendent John Paul Tyler, called for the sessions to be held in June, but Dr. H. B. Clarke, district superintendent at Lynchburg, offered a substitute calling for the last week in August or the first week in September, which was accepted.

The conference's action itself does not fix the date but forms a request to presiding Bishop William Walter Peele to set the earlier meeting date, as is his duty under the church law.

Redistricting Deferred

The decision disposed of the second controversial matter to come before the conference, which voted at its opening session last night to defer any reduction in the number of its districts until after the war.

The change in the meeting date was opposed by many delegates on the ground that pastors' gardens would be in full fruit if the move were made early in the summer and that the financial structure of the church would be thrown out of kilter, particularly where church membership depends heavily on money from tobacco, peanuts, cotton and other crops.

Dr. Gaither P. Warfield, member of the conference who lately returned from missionary work in Poland and a former prisoner of both the Russians and the Germans, spoke briefly and warned that unless the church is more alert "some day we shall wake up as churches awoke in Europe to find their privileges and heritages had been taken away."

Plea for Underprivileged

"If the church does not do more for the underprivileged, it will lose here in America what we've worked for all these years, we must share our faith, or some day we shall have the same result that came to Russia."

He said it was "nothing short of a miracle" that he and his family got back home.

Dr. George Wesley Jones of the Farmville District, speaking for the 431 individual ministers and 14 district superintendents who usually make detailed financial reports, reported that ministers were paid up in full, some of them two months ahead of time. The combined report was in the interest of conserving time of the session, which will last only three days compared with the usual five.

Rev. S. A. Kipe Heads Two-State Eldership

Westminster, Md., Oct. 14 (AP).—The Rev. S. A. Kipe of Gapland, Md. was elected president of the Maryland and Virginia eldership of the Churches of God for his ninth year today.

Other officers chosen at the seventy-first annual meeting were the Rev. John H. Boch, Uniontown, vice president, and the Rev. C. O. Sullivan, Frederick, secretary.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborne

"I had a friendly argument with my partner in a rubber-bridge game last night over my response to one of his opening bids," writes F. H. T. "He was dealer and opened the bidding with one club. These were my cards:

♠ A K 8 5
♡ K Q 7 6
◇ A J 9 7

"I responded with one spade. Partner contended that he did not care what suit or no trump I mentioned, providing it was a jump response I made. He said four plus high-card tricks and a singleton called for aggressive tactics. What is your opinion?"

Most good players would make the same response F. H. T. made, one spade. A jump bid is unwise, despite the powerful hand, as he has no five-card suit and the singleton is in his partner's suit.

The best plan is to bid one spade, which is forcing for one round, and then show the heart and diamond suits later. A jump bid on the first round would use up an extra round of bidding immediately and make it more difficult for the partnership to exchange information.

Where Jump Bid Helps

There are times when it is necessary to jump the bidding to show partner a powerful hand. North was wise to make a jump rebid in the bidding of today's hand, for South otherwise might have passed short of game. North made four spades by setting up a side suit before drawing trumps, keeping a trump in dummy to prevent the defenders from taking three tricks in their strong suit.

East opened the queen of hearts and west overtook with the king. He shifted to a trump, hoping to be able to prevent declarer from ruffing the third round of hearts in dummy.

Declarer won with South's spade ace, and seeing West's strategy, realized that either a trump or a heart lead would cost him two more heart tricks. He, therefore, led a small diamond from the board, allowing the adversaries to take their diamond trick immediately. West won and now the best he could do was to cash his heart ace, declarer taking the remaining tricks to make four spades.

If West had made any play other than cashing the heart ace North would have scored an overtrick. He would have drawn trumps and thrown off his two losing hearts on South's good diamonds. The defenders thus would have won only one diamond and one heart.
